Cash Box was founded by Bill Gersh in 1942. George Albert took ownership from the late 1950s until his passing in 1997. In 2006, Bruce Elrod, a music professional and record producer, revived the magazine as an online publication with the revised name, Cashbox. Bruce partnered with music promoter and magazine publisher, Randall Wilds, in 2018. This partnership re-established Cashbox as a printed publication. Today, Wilds & Associates continues the publication of Cashbox with integrity and pride, preserving the legacy of its founders and former owners - the late Bill Gersh, George Albert, and Bruce Elrod.

Kentucky Just Us, the powerhouse Americana Bluegrass band from Glasgow, Kentucky, is a family-rooted ensemble making waves across the acoustic music scene. The group features 24-year-old fiddle player and vocalist Kacey O'Neal, 16-year-old mandolinist Caleb O'Neal, 20-year-old guitarist Kolten Matthews, bassist Shelane O'Neal, and is led by 23-year-old National Banjo Champion Jesse Meador. Their motto - "Real Life, Real Family, Real Music" - says it all.

Vocalist Kacey O'Neal recalls how it all began: "Kentucky Just Us started in 2014 when we realized we could harmonize together singing along to the car radio. We went to Mom and Dad and asked if they'd help us pursue music as a career - and we haven't looked back since. Being the first artists in our family to tour professionally has been a major learning experience, and we've worked hard to develop a sound that truly embodies who we are."

Their influences span Bluegrass legends like Buddy Spicher, The Osborne Brothers, Flatt & Scruggs, and Glen Campbell. Over the years, they've had the honor of sharing the stage with many of their heroes, including Josh Turner, Ricky Skaggs, Gene Watson, Russell Moore (currently touring with Alison Krauss & Union Station), The Malpass Brothers, Dailey & Vincent, Shenandoah, and Wilson Fairchild.

Kentucky Just Us has graced some of the most iconic stages in the country, including the Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum, the Station Inn in Nashville, Georgia Mountain Fairgrounds in Hiawassee, Silver Dollar City, The Mansion Theatre in Branson, and the Country Music Highway Tribute Show in Louisa, Kentucky.

Their accolades are as impressive as their harmonies. Jesse Meador earned the title of 50th Walnut Valley Festival 'National Banjo Champion.' The band was named the first-ever ‘Artists in Residence’ at the Kentucky Music Hall of Fame and Museum, received the Bluegrass Heritage Foundation’s Johnny Lee Vincent Memorial Scholarship, won the inaugural Dailey & Vincent’s LandFest Band Contest, and took home the 2019 KSMU ‘Youth in Bluegrass’ Contest title.

A recent milestone came on November 2, 2025, when Kentucky Just Us won Fan’s Choice ‘Duo/Group of the Year’ at the Josie Music Awards, held at the legendary Grand Ole Opry in Nashville. The award coincided with the release of their new album, “10,” celebrating a decade of making music together.

“We’re so thankful and honored to be here this evening,” the band shared during their acceptance speech. “Thank you to our fans who voted for us - we couldn’t do this without you. Most of all, we thank the good Lord for giving us the opportunity to do what we love and make a living at it. And thank you to our sponsors, endorsers, and the Josie Music Family!”

Their new album, “10,” is a heartfelt tribute to their journey. It blends deep Kentucky roots with fresh sounds that resonate across generations of Bluegrass and Americana fans. The project features ten tracks - six written by band members - and includes collaborations with CMA nominee Tim Raybon and IBMA award winner David Stewart.

“10” is more than an album - it’s a celebration of where we’ve been, the music we love, and the future ahead,” the band says. “Every track takes listeners on a journey through joy, tears, tradition, and new horizons.”

The album also features appearances by five-time IBMA ‘Guitar Player of the Year Kenny Smith,’ Allen Dyer (Lorraine Jordan & Carolina Road), Pam Perry (New Coon Creek Girls, Wild Rose), and Tony Wray. Highlights include The Oak Tree Shade, a moving tribute to veterans, and Wild Blue Violets, a Blues-inspired, banjo-driven single penned by Jesse Meador. Kacey O’Neal contributes two originals - Sing for Me Whippoorwill and Last Train - while Shelane O’Neal closes the album with a deeply personal tribute to her late father, I’m So Thankful for You Daddy. The album also includes standout renditions of Tom T. Hall’s That’s How I Got to Memphis and the Osborne Brothers’ Georgia Mules and Country Boys.

Their latest single, Homeward Bound, spent over 29 weeks on national charts, reaching #1 on Roots Music Report, Bluegrass Borderline, and Mountain Bluegrass. It was also nominated for ‘Bluegrass Song of the Year’ at the 2025 Josie Music Awards.

Faith is central to the band’s identity. Jesse Meador shares the story behind one of their most meaningful songs:

“I wrote Oh What Love sitting in a church service. I was on the second pew from the front when I saw a sign above the pulpit that said, ‘I love you this much.’ Not saying I wasn’t listening to the preacher,” he laughs, “but by the time the sermon ended, the song was written.”

Looking ahead, the band remains grounded in their mission: “We want to keep growing as songwriters and share our music with as many people as we can, nationwide and beyond. Most importantly, our goal is to honor the Lord through it all, whether we’re playing a small-town festival or stepping onto the stage of the Grand Ole Opry.”

Kentucky Just Us continues to rise as one of the most exciting voices in Bluegrass, Roots, Country, and Americana. Their sound is equal parts heartfelt tradition and bold originality. With stunning harmonies, top-tier musicianship, and songs that stir the soul, they’ll have you laughing, tearing up, and loving every minute. Their energy and connection with the crowd make every show unforgettable.

Angela Seng

A LIFE SET TO MUSIC
a Heart Set Free

Angela Seng's story begins in the rolling hills of South Central Kentucky, where music wasn't simply entertainment - it was the atmosphere of her childhood.

She remembers the radio humming during car rides, Hee Haw flickering on the television on Saturday nights, and hymns rising from the church pews on Sunday mornings.

By Cory Parker

One cold December night, when Angela was just five years old, a singing group called The Song Masters visited her church. Among them was a young woman named Debra, the same Debra who would later become Debra Talley, mother of Lauren Talley. But on that night, she was simply a voice that captivated a little girl. Angela recalls being mesmerized, saying, "I wanted to grow up and sing just like her."

More importantly, that night she understood something eternal. "For the very first time as a 5-year-old child I understood and realized I was lost," she says. "I asked Jesus into my heart that night, and He saved me from my sins."

As she grew, Angela's hunger to learn everything she could about singing became insatiable. But one Sunday morning as a teenager, she attempted to apply what she had learned about breath control in front of her church, and it went terribly wrong. The embarrassment was so overwhelming that it ignited a fear that would bind her for the next thirty years.

"My efforts ended in an epic fail that led to 30 years of being bound by fear and stage fright," she admits.

Fear, insecurity, and body-image struggles followed her into adulthood. She starved herself to lose weight, only to gain it back again. "I became trapped by fear," she says. "I struggled with low self-esteem and body image issues."

Yet even in the struggle, she kept singing. God continued preparing her quietly, placing her in front of cameras, surrounding her with encouragers, and giving her opportunities even when her confidence wavered.

Everything changed when she attended a three-day spiritual retreat. Angela describes it as a holy collision, a moment when the presence of God became so overwhelming that fear had no choice but to bow. "I basked in the glory of His presence and left my fear, stage fright and insecurities about my body on the altar at the foot of the cross," she says. "I've learned I don't have to be a perfect 10 for the Lord to love me. His love is unconditional."

Long before she ever stepped onto a major stage, Angela was a little girl singing into a hairbrush microphone, imagining herself performing for crowds. She dreamed big, even then. But she never imagined that one of the voices she admired most - Barbara Fairchild - would one day become her best friend and mentor. Angela says, "There's no doubt she loves the Lord and people. She inspires and encourages me."

Barbara was the first to urge Angela to write songs. She was also the one God used to speak a life-changing truth into her heart. Angela remembers the moment vividly: "I realized I had never agreed to do all the Lord had called me to do. I surrendered my will to His will for my life. Immediately doors began opening for me."

Those open doors led her to stages she once only dreamed about: Branson, Nashville, the Sound Stage at Graceland, The Ark Encounter, and most memorably, the Grand Ole Opry House. Singing in the Country Chorale during the 42nd Annual Sunday Mornin' Country was a full-circle moment. "It was something I will always cherish and remember," she says.

Her musical journey has been marked by extraordinary success - #1 singles, awards, and international airplay - but also by divine appointments. One of the most significant was meeting producer and musician Mike Schrimpf. Angela says, "The ability to sing the Blues is a God-given talent I was born with. Mike encouraged me to embrace my natural soulful singing ability and to pick up my songwriting pen."

Together they co-wrote All I Need Is The Lord, a song that earned her a nomination for 'Female Songwriter of the Year' at the Josie Music Awards. Their collaboration produced her most successful album to date, "Fired Up and Filled Up," which yielded multiple #1 singles and Gold and Platinum awards.

Angela's life is filled with stories of God's provision, but one of her favorites is the day He gave her the exact dress she had dreamed of - a royal blue gown with black beaded sequins and a sheer jacket. She found it in a thrift store called Amazon Hope, brand new, in her size, for five dollars. "I knew it was a gift from God to me for my Birthday," she says.

Not every desire, however, has been fulfilled in the way she expected. When she didn't win an international female vocalist award she desperately wanted, she questioned God. His answer was firm but loving. Angela recalls, "He said, 'I am the Lord your God. I am the one who opens doors for your ministry and I don't need a 15-pound glass trophy to do it!'"

Four months later, He opened international doors anyway.

Today, Angela's mission is simple: to reach the world for Christ through music. Her concerts are high-energy, multi-genre, and filled with testimony. She shares her story openly - the fear, the healing, the victories - and introduces audiences to the Jesus who changed her life. One of her most treasured memories is seeing a 13-month-old baby worshipping as she sang. "It was one of the greatest rewards I've ever received," she says.

Angela was humbled to be named 'New Inspirational Artist of the Year' in the 2026 Music Star Country Fan Awards

Angela and her husband Wayne are currently facing a difficult season as the factory where Wayne works prepares to close. They are asking believers to join them in prayer for a new job that will allow him to continue supporting and traveling with her in ministry.

Through every triumph and trial, Angela Seng has learned to delight herself in the Lord, trusting Him to give her the desires of her heart. Her life is a testament to what God can do with a willing vessel, a woman who once sang into a hairbrush microphone and now sings on stages across the nation, carrying the message of hope, healing, and salvation. She is not just making music. She is making disciples. She is making a difference. And she is walking boldly in the calling she finally agreed to embrace.

SHAUN MURPHY

Shaun Murphy stands among the rare voices that can shake a stage and still touch the soul. From her Motown beginnings to Broadway lights and the roaring Blues circuits of Detroit, she's built a career defined by power, authenticity, and endurance. With a résumé that reads like a Rock-and-Roll hall of fame and a spirit rooted in the Blues, Murphy continues to prove that her voice - bold, unbreakable, and unmistakably her own - remains one of America's most electrifying treasures.

When Shaun Murphy steps to the microphone, the air changes. Her voice - rich, fearless, and steeped in soul - doesn't just sing the Blues; it commands them. For decades, she's been the powerhouse behind some of the most iconic names in Rock and Rhythm, carving a legacy that bridges Motown, Broadway, and the electric pulse of the Blues stage.

Her awakening came in 1969 at the first Ann Arbor Blues Festival, a landmark event that introduced America to the Electric Blues. Sharing the bill with legends like Muddy Waters, Howlin' Wolf, and B.B. King, Murphy found herself standing at the crossroads of history. "That was my awakening to the Blues," she recalls. "It was an honor - and a calling."

Rooted in Detroit's vibrant music scene, Murphy's path wound through both sound and stage. She studied music while pursuing acting, landing roles in "Hair" and "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band On The Road," appearing in both Broadway productions. Those performances led to a Motown contract and a partnership with "Meatloaf on Stoney" and "Meatloaf," a Billboard-charting album later reissued as "Everything Under the Sun."

Her voice soon became a fixture in Rock's inner circle - recording Katmandu with Bob Seger, touring with his Borneo Band, and later joining Eric Clapton for "Behind the Sun," "Live Aid," and world tours that included the filming of "Forever Man." From 1993 to 2009, she became the only female member in Little Feat's fifty-year history, sharing lead vocals and songwriting duties with Bill Payne, Paul Barrere, and Fred Tackett.

Murphy's solo career has been just as prolific. Since 2009, she's released a string of acclaimed albums - "Livin' the Blues," "Cry of Love," "Loretta," "Mighty Gates," "Flame Still Burns," and "I'm Coming Home" - each a testament to her enduring fire. Her latest, "Brand New Blues" (2026), marks a creative high point. "I think it's my best one yet," she says. "We were writing, recording, and then a friend sent a song that stopped us in our tracks. It became the title track, Brand New Blues."

The album features her longtime band: Tom DelRossi (drums, co-producer), Tommy Stillwell (guitars, vocals), Anthony Saddic (keyboards), and Mike Mean (bass) alongside co-producer and manager TC Davis. The single I'm Gonna Take the Money has already drawn rave reviews for its bold, up-tempo spirit.

Across her recordings, Murphy has collaborated with a constellation of greats: Bekka Bramlett, Mike Finnigan, Johnny Neel, Jack Pearson, Jim Horn, Kenny Greenberg, Danny Pelfrey, Laura Creamer, Barbara Payton, and the Motor City Horns. Her résumé reads like a hall of fame: Eric Clapton, Bob Seger, Little Feat, Meatloaf, Herbie Hancock, Phil Collins, Glenn Frey, Joe Walsh, Maria Muldaur, Bruce Hornsby, Michael Bolton, Coco Montoya, Alice Cooper, and more.

A three-time Grammy nominee and multiple Blues Music Award honoree, Murphy continues to embody the spirit of the Blues - resilient, passionate, and unyielding. Her voice carries the echoes of every stage she's graced, from Detroit's clubs to the world's arenas.

And through it all, one truth remains: Shaun Murphy doesn't just sing the Blues - she lives them, breathes them, and turns them into something brand new.

There's a new road opening up in Nashville, and for artists searching for more than just a place to release music, it may lead exactly where they've been trying to go. Rhythm Road Records, led by owner and producer David Timms, is stepping onto the scene with a simple philosophy: great artists deserve great music, honest direction, and people in their corner who genuinely believe in what they're creating. Timms brings an artist's perspective to the producer's chair. He understands that behind every single, every studio session, and every dream of hearing a song on the radio is a person trying to find their place in an industry that can sometimes feel overwhelming. At Rhythm Road, the goal is to make that journey feel a little less complicated and a lot more personal. With an ear for authentic country music and a respect for the craft of songwriting, Timms is building Rhythm Road around quality rather than shortcuts. It's about finding the right songs, the right sound, the right players, and the right path forward for each individual artist. But perhaps what sets Rhythm Road apart is the atmosphere Timms wants to create. This isn't about artists becoming another name on a roster. It's about building relationships, developing talent, and creating a place where musicians can walk through the door with a dream and find experienced friends ready to help them shape it. Rhythm Road Records is Nashville business with a front-porch spirit: professional, passionate, and always about the music.

The Music Lives On

Clive Jay Davis

April 4, 1932 – June 22, 2026

Clive Jay Davis was born on April 4, 1932, in Brooklyn, New York, arriving into a working-class world that would one day marvel at his extraordinary ear for music and his unmatched instinct for talent. His early years were shaped by discipline, curiosity, and a drive that carried him far beyond the neighborhood where he grew up. Gifted academically, Clive earned a full scholarship to New York University, graduating magna cum laude in 1953, and went on to complete his law degree at Harvard Law School in 1956 - achievements that revealed both his intellect and his relentless pursuit of excellence.

Clive entered the music industry in 1960 as assistant counsel for Columbia Records, expecting a legal career but discovering instead the calling that would define his life. His rise was swift. By 1967, at just 35 years old, he became president of Columbia Records, ushering in a transformative era in American music. That same year, at the Monterey Pop Festival, Clive's legendary instinct revealed itself. Hearing Janis Joplin's electrifying performance, he signed Big Brother and the Holding Company on the spot. It was the first of many historic decisions.

During his tenure at Columbia, Clive Davis signed and mentored an astonishing roster of artists; Bruce Springsteen, Santana, Chicago, Earth, Wind & Fire, Aerosmith, and Billy Joel, shaping the sound of the 1970s and establishing Columbia as the dominant force in Rock and Pop. His influence was not merely administrative; it was visionary. He recognized greatness before the world did, and he nurtured it with precision, passion, and unwavering belief.

In 1974, Clive founded Arista Records, where his reputation as "The Man with the Golden Ears" reached legendary heights. It was here that he discovered a young Whitney Houston, guiding her from promising newcomer to global icon. He curated "The Bodyguard" soundtrack, now one of the best-selling albums of all time. At Arista, he also revitalized the careers of Aretha Franklin, Dionne Warwick, and Carlos Santana, while championing artists as varied as Barry Manilow and Patti Smith. His vision expanded into groundbreaking partnerships with LaFace Records and Bad Boy Entertainment, bringing Usher, OutKast, and The Notorious B.I.G. into the mainstream and shaping the future of R&B and Hip-Hop.

Clive continued to innovate into the new millennium, founding J Records in 2000 and introducing the world to Alicia Keys. Under Sony Music Entertainment, he remained a guiding force behind countless hit records, proving that his instinct for talent never dimmed.

His legacy extended beyond the studio. In 2002, he endowed the Clive Davis Institute of Recorded Music at NYU's Tisch School of the Arts, ensuring that future generations of creators would have a place to learn, experiment, and grow. A four-time Grammy winner, recipient of the Recording Academy Trustees Award, and inductee of the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame, Clive Davis became not only a titan of the industry but a steward of its future.

On June 22, 2026, at his home in Manhattan, Clive Davis passed away peacefully at the age of 94, surrounded by family and loved ones. His family shared a tribute that captured both the public legend and the private man: He was the visionary who shaped the soundtrack of countless lives, and the steady, loving presence at the center of their own.

Clive Davis leaves behind a legacy that changed music forever - a legacy built on instinct, courage, and an unwavering belief in the artists he championed. His influence endures in every record he shaped, every career he launched, and every life touched by the music he helped bring into the world.

Bonnie Tyler

June 8, 1951 – July 8, 2026

Bonnie Tyler was born Gaynor Hopkins on June 8, 1951, in the village of Skewen, Wales, arriving into a world that would one day echo with her unmistakable voice - a voice that could tremble, roar, and soar all at once. Raised in a close-knit Welsh family, she grew up surrounded by music, singing along to the radio and discovering early on that she carried a sound unlike anyone else. Those childhood melodies became the foundation of a career that would stretch across five decades and circle the globe.

In the mid-1970s, she stepped into the spotlight under the stage name Bonnie Tyler, embracing a new identity as she began performing professionally. Everything changed in 1976, when surgery to remove vocal nodules left her with the raspy, gravelly tone that would become her signature. What could have been a setback instead became destiny. Her voice - raw, powerful, and instantly recognizable - set her apart from every other singer of her era.

Bonnie's breakthrough came in 1977 with It's a Heartache, a song that swept across the UK and the United States, establishing her as a rising international star. Her blend of Pop, Rock, and Country sensibilities made her a crossover phenomenon, and audiences connected deeply with the emotional grit in her delivery.

The 1980s brought Bonnie Tyler into the realm of legend. Her collaboration with songwriter-producer Jim Steinman produced one of the most iconic power ballads in music history: Total Eclipse of the Heart. Released in 1983, the song topped charts worldwide, earned her Grammy nominations, and became a defining anthem of the decade. She followed this triumph with Holding Out for a Hero for the "Footloose" soundtrack, a track that cemented her place in pop culture and remains a staple of film, television, and stage to this day.

Across more than fifty years, Bonnie released dozens of studio albums, including "Faster Than the Speed of Night," "Secret Dreams and Forbidden Fire," and "Bitterblue." Her music traveled far beyond Wales, building an international fanbase that remained devoted well into the 2020s. Even in her later years, she continued to record and tour, releasing new music in 2026, including One World One Home for the documentary "Homeless" - a testament to her enduring passion for her craft.

On July 8, 2026, Bonnie Tyler passed away at the age of 75. Her sudden illness brought an unexpected close to a life defined by resilience, artistry, and the kind of voice that could shake arenas and stir hearts.

Bonnie Tyler leaves behind a legacy of unforgettable power ballads, passionate performances, and a sound that inspired generations. Her voice - fierce, emotional, unmistakable - remains one of the great instruments of modern music.

Hayden Panettiere

August 21, 1989 – August 16, 2026

Hayden Lesley Panettiere was born on August 21, 1989, in Palisades, New York, arriving with a spark that seemed to announce itself from the very beginning. Even as an infant, she stepped naturally into the world of performance, appearing in commercials before most children learn to walk. Her early years were shaped by creativity, discipline, and a family who recognized her rare gift, a presence that could fill a room and a voice that carried emotion far beyond her age.

By childhood, Hayden was already becoming a familiar face to American audiences. She secured recurring roles on One Life to Live and Guiding Light, proving herself capable of the demanding pace of daytime television. At just nine years old, she earned a Grammy nomination for her voice work as Princess Dot in Pixar's A Bug's Life, a milestone that hinted at the extraordinary career ahead. Through films like Remember the Titans and Ice Princess, she transitioned seamlessly into teen roles, showing a natural ability to inhabit characters with warmth, humor, and sincerity.

In 2006, Hayden stepped into a role that would define a cultural moment. As Claire Bennet, the invincible cheerleader on NBC's hit sci-fi drama Heroes, she became the face of one of television's most iconic phrases: "Save the cheerleader, save the world." Her performance catapulted her to global stardom, establishing her as a premier young actress with both emotional depth and magnetic screen presence. She later expanded her legacy into horror royalty as Kirby Reed in the Scream franchise, becoming a fan favorite whose return in Scream VI was celebrated across the genre.

Yet it was Hayden's portrayal of Juliette Barnes on Nashville that revealed the full breadth of her talent. As the fiery, vulnerable, emotionally complex Country superstar, she delivered one of television's most unforgettable performances. Hayden sang her own vocals, pouring raw authenticity into songs like Don't Put Dirt on My Grave Just Yet, Telescope, Hypnotizing, Nothing in This World Will Ever Break My Heart Again, and the haunting duet Undermine with Charles Esten. Her work earned two Golden Globe nominations and helped shape the musical identity of the series itself. Through Juliette Barnes, Hayden proved she was not only a gifted actress but a powerful Country-Pop vocalist whose performances resonated deeply with fans.

Beyond her artistic achievements, Hayden Panettiere became known for her courage. She spoke openly about her struggles with postpartum depression, addiction, and domestic abuse - choosing transparency over silence, healing over hiding. On August 16, 2026, in Greenville, South Carolina, Hayden Panettiere passed away at the age of 36. She leaves behind a legacy of performances that shaped modern television and touched hearts around the world.

Hayden's life was a bright flame - brilliant, complex, courageous, and deeply human. Her voice remains in the characters she brought to life, the songs she sang, and the people she inspired. Her light endures.

Frank Lee Beard

June 11, 1949 – August 17, 2026

Frank Lee Beard was born on June 11, 1949, in the small East Texas town of Frankston, arriving with a natural rhythm that would one day pulse through stadiums, radios, and generations. Raised in Irving, he grew up surrounded by the sounds of Texas - Blues riffs drifting from porches, the hum of local bands, and the restless heartbeat of a young musician searching for his place. By the time he reached his teens, Frank had already found his calling behind a drum kit. The sticks felt like an extension of his hands, and the rhythm felt like home.

As a young man, Frank cut his teeth in the Texas music scene, performing with groups such as The Moving Sidewalks and American Blues. Those early years were gritty, loud, and full of promise - the kind of proving ground where talent is sharpened and lifelong friendships are born. In late 1969, everything changed. Frank teamed up with guitarist Billy Gibbons, and soon after suggested bringing in his longtime friend and musical collaborator, bassist Dusty Hill. With that decision, the classic lineup of ZZ Top was born - a trio that would remain intact for more than fifty years and become one of the most enduring forces in American Rock.

Together, the three crafted a sound that was unmistakably theirs: a fusion of Blues swagger, Hard-Rock grit, and sharp Texas humor. At the center of it all was Frank's steady, driving backbeat, the heartbeat of the band. His drumming grounded early hits like La Grange and Tush, powering ZZ Top through the 1970s and into the stratosphere with their 1983 global phenomenon "Eliminator." Songs like Sharp Dressed Man, Legs, and Gimme All Your Lovin' became cultural landmarks, carried by the rhythmic engine Frank supplied with effortless authority.

And in one of Rock's most beloved ironies, Frank - the drummer of ZZ Top - remained the only member without a beard. While Gibbons and Hill grew their iconic chest-length whiskers in the late '70s, Frank kept his clean-shaven look, smiling at the joke that followed him for decades.

Recognition came in waves, culminating in the band's induction into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame in 2004. Through triumphs, tours, and changing eras, Frank's drumming remained the constant - inventive, powerful, and unmistakably Texan. After Dusty Hill's passing in 2021, Frank and Billy continued performing with Elwood Francis, honoring the legacy they had built together.

Tributes poured in after Frank's passing, including Billy Gibbons' heartfelt words remembering him as "one of the most naturally innovative drummers and a great and true son of Texas," a musician whose backbeat kept the group on top for half a century.

On August 17, 2026, at his ranch in Richmond, Texas, Frank Lee Beard passed away peacefully under hospice care, surrounded by his family. He was 77. Per his final wishes, ZZ Top will continue touring, carrying forward the rhythm he forged, the legacy he shaped, and the sound that bears his unmistakable imprint.

Frank Beard leaves behind a story written in drumbeats, laughter, friendship, and the raw spirit of Texas rock. His rhythm remains... steady, driving, unforgettable.

The feature film will hit U.S. theaters nationwide on August 6, 2027.

Snoop Dogg first publicly revealed plans for the biopic during Universal's presentation at CinemaCon in Las Vegas. Celebrating the project alongside theater owners, Snoop noted that physical production was slated to begin during the summer. "After my brothers got to tell their story with Straight Outta Compton, now it's my turn," Snoop stated. "My director, Craig Brewer, he just showed us how hard it is out here for a pimp from Hustle & Flow. And then last year, he got us all singing Sweet Caroline."

Universal Pictures officially added Snoop to its theatrical calendar for next summer, slotting the film into the August 6, 2027.

Cast and creative team include: Jonathan Daviss (Outer Banks) stars as Snoop Dogg (Calvin Broadus), Lauren London portraying Snoop's late mother, Beverly Tate, Myles Bullock playing hip-hop icon and longtime collaborator Dr. Dre.

Craig Brewer (Hustle & Flow, Song Sung Blue) directs the film, having written the revised screenplay based on an original script by Joe Robert Cole. Produced by Snoop Dogg and Death Row Pictures President Sara Ramaker, alongside Imagine Entertainment's Brian Grazer and Allan Mandelbaum.

Billed as an authentic, R-rated look into the life and legacy of the West Coast Rap icon, "Snoop" marks the first feature project under Death Row Pictures' overall partnership with NBCUniversal. Universal Pictures brings a proven track record of celebrated Hip-Hop cinema to the project, following past critically and commercially acclaimed releases "8 Mile" and "Straight Outta Compton."

Even as development on his life story reaches its production phase, the 54-year-old Long Beach native continues his relentless schedule across music and pop culture. Snoop recently teamed up with West Coast veterans Kurupt and DJ Battlecat to release the new single Me N the Boyz. Across his decorated career, Snoop Dogg has charted 45 entries on the Billboard Hot 100, including iconic No. 1 hits such as Drop It Like It's Hot, as well as featured appearances on Katy Perry's California Gurls and Akon's I Wanna Love You.

The Grascals' Album 'Not That Gone' Available Now

Three-time GRAMMY nominees and two-time International Bluegrass Music Association (IBMA) 'Entertainers of the Year' The Grascals have released their latest album, "Not That Gone," available via Billy Blue Records on all major streaming and digital download platforms. The 11-track collection marks the band's first release with the label and showcases The Grascals' signature harmonies, world-class musicianship and timeless Bluegrass sound while celebrating new beginnings and longtime musical friendships.

The release comes as the group continues to earn industry acclaim, including a 2026 GMA Dove Award nomination for 'Bluegrass/Country/Roots Recorded Song of the Year' for Broken Angels, their collaboration with Dolly Parton. The song, written by Parton and The Grascals' Jamie Johnson, also earned three 2026 International Bluegrass Music Association (IBMA) Award nominations, further cementing its place as one of the year's standout Bluegrass recordings. Additionally, The Grascals' Kristin Scott Benson earned a nomination for IBMA 'Banjo Player of the Year.'

Produced by The Grascals and Ben Isaacs, "Not That Gone" features original songs and traditional Bluegrass influences. The album introduces new member Kyle Perkins on bass following the 2025 retirement of founding member Terry Smith, while showcasing the current lineup of Danny Roberts (mandolin), Johnson (guitar/vocals), Benson (banjo), John Bryan (guitar/vocals) and Jamie Harper (fiddle/guitar/vocals). The project also reunites The Grascals with long-time collaborators and friends throughout the recording process.

"I'm really excited about our new album as it marks some new beginnings and reunites us with some old friends," shares Roberts. "Founding member and bass player Terry Smith retired in 2025 and though he is missed, we are thankful to have our new bass slinger and one of the best in the business, Kyle Perkins, playing on this record. It was also really special to be reunited with original Grascals fiddler Jimmy Mattingly, Dolly Parton bandmate Kent Wells and Dolly herself on the very special song Broken Angels, written by Dolly and Jamie. We sure hope that everyone enjoys Not That Gone!"

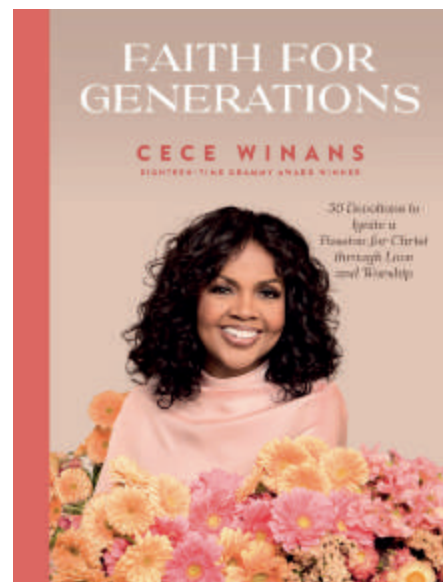

Reflecting on the collaborative spirit behind the project, Johnson says: "This was a really fun album to record and yet again I'm proud to be a part of The Grascals! Jamie Harper did an outstanding job taking over a huge role - Terry Smith was and is a legend - and Kyle Perkins is rock solid on bass. I was grateful to pen songs with Dolly Parton (Broken Angels), Vince Gill on a song for our mothers (Memories of Mother), along with heroes of mine Jerry Salley, Jim McBride and Darren Nicholson. We're excited that the album is finally out, and we can't wait for everyone to hear these songs and experience them live."

With "Not That Gone" now available, The Grascals continue their legacy as one of Bluegrass music's most respected and celebrated groups, delivering a collection that honors their roots while embracing a new era for the band. For more information, visit grascals.com.

Kid Rock Says He Felt 'Called' to Make His Upcoming Christian Album

Kid Rock's next musical collection may be different from his past projects, but it's one he feels very passionate about. In fact, he feels "called" to it. The next project Kid Rock will roll out will be a Christian album, which he says is inspired by a spiritual journey that he has been on. Earlier this year, he recorded a new version of Cody Johnson's song 'Til You Can't and added in a new verse. The song was a part of the Turning Point Super Bowl halftime show in February, and it sounds like it was part of a larger chapter in Rock's life.

"It's kind of this spiritual journey I've been on and I've had a calling through James 1:17," he explains to Fox & Friends. "My middle name being James and 1/17 my birthday. I looked up that passage a while back and it's all good things basically come from God. After I wrote the verse for the Turning Point halftime for Cody Johnson's song 'Til You Can't about Jesus giving everyone a second chance, I started writing more songs."

Faith has always lingered around his life, but ultimately church was never a place he wanted to be. "Growing up Catholic and going to Catholic church, I was always like, 'I have to confess this is boring. This music is terrible,'" he admits. "And I'd go to Baptist churches and non-denominational just looking for the music that I wanted to hear and there's some good stuff, but it was always a little bit of this dark place."

He hopes this new album will change that. "So, I decided to write the songs that I kind of wanted to celebrate Jesus and my faith with, which are Rock and Roll, Country, Hip-Hop," he shares. "And I picture, you know, this celebration on a Saturday night, everyone celebrating God, drinking beer, just having a great time," he adds. "Making it this place that you wanna go to, that you don't wanna miss, not that you have to go to."

The singer received his first No. 1 on the Billboard Hot Christian Songs chart with his version of 'Til You Can't in February. The album will be released in the fall of 2026.

Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson Releases Emotionally Charged New Song, 'My Dad'

Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson has stepped into a new creative spotlight with the release of My Dad, a heartfelt and deeply personal track featured on "Disney's Moana: Voices Across the Ocean" companion album. The song, co-written with Hawaiian artist and American Idol winner Iam Tongi, captures Johnson's reflections on fatherhood, legacy, and the lasting imprint of his late father, WWE Hall of Famer Rocky Johnson.

Originally drafted under the working title My Dad, the song evolved from early writing sessions between Johnson and Tongi, both of whom share powerful stories shaped by their fathers. Tongi's emotional songwriting inspired Johnson to explore his own journey as a son and as a father to his three daughters. The result is a track that blends Pacific Islander warmth with Johnson's unmistakable sincerity, creating one of the album's most intimate moments.

Johnson, who also serves as an executive producer on the project, says the song reflects "the things that have taught me the most about being a man." His vocals carry a grounded honesty that fans will immediately recognize - a reminder that behind the global superstar is a father who treasures the lessons passed down through generations.

My Dad is now available on all major streaming platforms as part of "Moana: Voices Across the Ocean," joining a lineup of artists celebrating culture, family, and the spirit of the Pacific.

Nashville Songwriters Hall of Fame Announces 2026 Induction Class

The Nashville Songwriters Hall of Fame has unveiled its 2026 induction class, and this year's lineup is nothing short of extraordinary. Five remarkable writers - Lyle Lovett, Lee Thomas Miller, Taylor Swift, Bruce Channel, and Shawn Camp - will be enshrined later this year, joining the ranks of the most influential and enduring voices in American songwriting.

This distinguished group represents a powerful blend of artistry, craftsmanship, and cultural impact. While Lyle Lovett and Taylor Swift are celebrated globally for the songs they've penned and recorded themselves, the remaining honorees have shaped Country music from behind the scenes, contributing to some of the genre's most beloved hits. Their work has fueled careers, defined eras, and left an unmistakable mark on the soundtrack of Country music.

Among the standout songs connected to this year's inductees are chart-topping favorites such as Two Pina Colodas recorded by Garth Brooks, River of Love by George Strait, You're Gonna Miss This by Trace Adkins, In Color by Jamey Johnson, It Matters to Her by Scotty McCreery, Party Time by T.G. Sheppard, and As Long As I'm Rockin' With You by John Conlee. These songs - and many more - reflect the depth, diversity, and emotional resonance that define the songwriting legacies of this year's class.

The 56th annual Nashville Songwriters Hall of Fame Gala will take place later this year, where industry leaders, artists, and fans will gather to celebrate the achievements and contributions of these exceptional writers. The ceremony remains one of the most respected traditions in Music City, honoring those whose words and melodies continue to shape the heart of Country music.

This year's inductees stand as a testament to the power of storytelling and the enduring influence of songwriters who craft the music that moves generations.

Beatles Unheard 'Day Tripper' Work Tape Revealed Ahead of the 'Rubber Soul Special Edition,' Set for release on October 2

A newly unearthed home recording of Day Tripper is giving Beatles fans an unprecedented glimpse into the raw, unfiltered songwriting partnership of John Lennon and Paul McCartney. Captured at Lennon's Kenwood home during the "Rubber Soul" era, the Day Tripper (Songwriting Work Tape) presents the song long before it became one of the band's most recognizable hits.

Unlike the polished single fans know, this early tape shows Lennon and McCartney experimenting with ideas drawn from an old folk tune Lennon had been developing. The iconic guitar riff had not yet been conceived. Instead, listeners hear the two songwriters laughing, teasing one another, and testing out lyrical fragments as they shape the earliest version of the track. At one point, Lennon jokes about how loud the recording levels are, adding to the candid, human feel of the session.

The finished Day Tripper would later be completed in an intense eight-hour studio sprint and released as a double A-side with We Can Work It Out, separate from the "Rubber Soul" album. This newly released tape highlights the song's earliest evolution and offers a rare window into the creative process behind one of the Beatles' most enduring works.

The work tape arrives ahead of the "Rubber Soul Special Edition," set for release on October 2. The expanded collection explores the making of the landmark album, featuring 24 early session recordings, 20 previously unheard takes, three home demos, and both new and original mixes. It follows the recent archival release of Michelle (Take 1), giving fans another behind-the-scenes look at the band's studio journey.

This drop also comes as UMG and Apple Corps strengthen their long-term partnership. Under the expanded agreement, UMG will oversee global Beatles merchandise, licensing, and e-commerce. UMG Chairman and CEO Sir Lucian Grainge praised the Beatles as "one of the most iconic and enduring cultural brands of all time," calling the partnership a major step forward in expanding how fans experience the band's legacy.

The Beatles' cultural impact continues to grow worldwide. In celebration of Global Beatles Day, Apple Corps recently colorized and uploaded the band's 1967 "All You Need Is Love" broadcast to YouTube for the first time, sparking fan events across the globe. Looking ahead, a full Beatles fan experience is set to open at 3 Savile Row in 2027, and director Sam Mendes' ambitious four-film Beatles project is slated for release in 2028.

American Idol Alum, Michael Sarver Releases 'Layer One' EP

Acclaimed singer/songwriter Michael Sarver released his highly anticipated Christian music debut set, "Layer One." The first of two new EPs on tap for the American Idol alum this fall, the S&G Music Enterprises project showcases seven songs co-penned by Sarver - a collection both stylistically diverse and autobiographically resonant.

Standout track Storms Don't Bother Me, written by Sarver, Matthew Humphrey and Tyler Logan, is an upbeat Pop anthem encapsulating the EP's overarching message. Casting doubt and fear aside, Sarver sings with the confidence of a man who knows God's faithfulness even when the storms of life rage. Additional highlights of "Layer One" include the newly penned Gospel ballad

Fire, an ode to the impassioned songs of Sarver's upbringing in the Pentecostal church; and Faithful, an R&B-inspired track showcasing the powerhouse vocalist's soulful sensibilities.

"Layer One" also boasts Sarver's popular singles More Like You, a poignant plea for authenticity co-written by Sidewalk Prophets' Dave Frey; the infectious Count It All Joy; Wonderful God, a heart-cry of worship; and Limitless, its soaring chorus celebrating a prodigal's return: "I cannot change Your Father's heart/Cause distance never seems too far/And even if it's all my fault/You forgive me/You're limitless."

A Top 10 finalist on Season 8 of American Idol with a string of Country singles to his credit, Sarver embraced the call to Christian music in 2025 - a conviction that had quietly compelled his heart for many years. "No life is made up of only one story; no journey is made up of only one road traveled," he explains. "'Layer One' is the first of two 'layers' I'm releasing this fall, sharing through lyrics and a range of musical styles the multiple facets of my life. From the influences of Steven Curtis Chapman to 4Him to the Gaither Vocal Band, these EPs help paint the full picture of what has made me the man and artist that I am today."

Miranda Lambert to Celebrate 'Crisco' with Special Album Release Show at Billy Bob's Texas

Three-time Grammy winner Miranda Lambert officially announces her new studio album, "Crisco," arriving October 2, 2026 via MCA Nashville. The 12-track collection marks a vibrant new era for Lambert, blending honky-tonk grit, dance-floor shimmer, desert-highway wanderlust, and the emotional storytelling that has defined her two-decade career.

Produced by Miranda Lambert and Jesse Frasure, "Crisco" explores the full spectrum of Country music - from heartbreak and nostalgia to freedom, adventure, and rhinestone-bright fun. Lambert describes the project as a return to instinct, authenticity, and the musical corners she's always loved.

"I've always loved every corner of Country music - the heartbreak songs, the honky-tonk songs, the songs that make you think and the songs that make you dance. Making this record reminded me that those things don't have to be separated. We followed the songs wherever they wanted to go, trusted our instincts and ended up with something that feels really fun and really honest to who I am."

In celebration of her highly anticipated new album, Miranda Lambert will return to her home state for a one-night-only album release show on Tuesday, October 6. Visit www.MirandaLambert.com for more information.

Fittingly, the celebration will take place at Billy Bob's Texas, where generations of fans have filled one of Country music's most iconic dance floors. It's a natural homecoming for "Crisco," an album inspired by the long-overlooked kinship between Country music's dance hall tradition and its shared heartbeat with Disco clubs.

"When I was in the studio recording "Crisco," I kept picturing the rhinestone saddle at Billy Bob's," shares Lambert. "It's the perfect visual for a Country Disco album: honky tonk with some extra rhinestones and shine. I've played some of my all-time favorite shows at Billy Bob's and it felt like the best place to bring everyone together to have fun and live out the feeling of this album."

The show announcement comes on the heels of Lambert's release of Sunset Marquis, a dreamy, California-soaked song that joins the previously released title track plus Till The Going's Gone and GRAMMY-nominated duet A Song To Sing with Chris Stapleton in showcasing the vibrant layers and joyful creative spirit at the heart of Crisco.

Barry Manilow Taking A Break From Touring To Focus On Health

Barry Manilow canceled several shows recently due to health issues. The 83-year-old now has confirmed he is stepping off stage until October to look after his health.

Manilow stated on social media about taking a much needed break. "Hi everybody - Barry here. And I want you to be the first to know that we're going to take a quick break. We just finished a fantastic summer tour. 29 shows in 68 days. The shows were fantastic. The audiences were fantastic. And I sounded fantastic. But it seems that we were pushing a little too hard. Now we all need to sit down and shut up. So, we're going to take a break until we return to the Westgate Las Vegas on October 8th. When I'll be singing like a bird. I hope to see you then."

The Copacabana hitmaker cancelled gigs in Las Vegas in February as well as his arena tour launch dates that month and in March, followed by his April concerts because he was still "not quite ready" to return to the stage.

Barry was diagnosed with stage 1 lung cancer in December 2025 after the disease was detected during an MRI after hearing about recent bouts of bronchitis, and he underwent a lobectomy to remove a tumor on his left lung.

The Mandy singer who confirmed he is cancer-free three months later - recently said he never thought cancer would "get me" because of being "too busy" with his illustrious music career.

Lee Newton

On A Mission Sharing Music, Memories & Milestones

Singer/Songwriter Lee Newton experienced her share of hard times growing up, but music was always a source of hope. At just five years old, Lee began singing in church alongside her mother. Her love for music blossomed when her father, a local cab driver, filled their home with the sounds of Hank Williams, Loretta Lynn, Tammy Wynette, and Patsy Cline. At seven, he placed a guitar in her hands, teaching her to play as they sang together while he was on his cab routes. “My Daddy, who named me Brenda Lee after the amazing Country singer, always told me, ‘One day, you’ll be playing at the Grand Ole Opry.’ From that moment, I knew music was my calling.”

Her influences include Patsy Cline, Loretta Lynn, The Judds, Lorrie Morgan. By age 20, she was performing with bands, playing drums, and singing backup for original members of Lynyrd Skynyrd.

Lee’s solo journey has been marked with memories and milestones. Her albums “Unleashed,” “Crossroads,” and “Homesick” have produced chart-topping singles and major collaborations. In 2023, Lee released her first Gospel record,

Lee Newton’s story has always been one of grit, grace, and God-given purpose. From her Carolina roots to the bright lights of Nashville, she has carved out a place in Country music by staying true to the values she was raised on - faith, family, honesty, and hard work. With every new project, she continues to carry the banner of Country music like those legendary ladies before her.

By Robin Tanner

“Crossroads,” featuring duets with Joe Bonsall (The Oak Ridge Boys), T. Graham Brown, Rhonda Vincent, Dale Houston, Tony Jackson, Kathryn Shipley, Ben Isaacs, and more.

Lee’s newest album, “Beautifully Undone,” is a return to the raw, acoustic honesty that shaped her early songwriting. “I love songwriting and I love that feeling of sitting in the living room and you’re writing and it’s just you and the guitar,” she says. “These songs are just gifts when they’re done like that.” After releasing four full albums, Lee felt it was time to revisit the songs that started it all.

“I just wanted to go back to the way it was when I first wrote some of these songs. I wanted people to hear them with that true authenticity of the vocal and the guitar. That just says a lot when you can touch people with just your voice and your guitar... I most definitely wanted to strip these songs down and take it back and re-record them. I’m so proud of how they turned out.”

Lee recorded fan favorites from her albums, including Strength of A Woman, Your Hat, Carolina Rain and Lee’s #1 Song, Working Girl Blues.

One of the defining moments of Lee’s career came with the recording of Working Girl Blues, featured on her 2022 album “Unleashed.” The song became a #1 hit and a fan favorite, but for Lee, it meant far more than chart success. “That was such a highlight to record Working Girl Blues because I loved Merle Haggard,” she says. “But to do Leona Williams’ version of Working Girl Blues, who was married to Merle, and to have her sing on it with me was special. I look up to Leona so much and have the utmost respect for her. Now I look to her as a bonus mom. She is always encouraging to young artists.”

The collaboration didn’t stop there. Her producer, Bill McDermott, reached out to Pam Tillis, and the magic continued. “My producer sent her the track, and she came back and said she would do it. I was like a kid in a candy store! I grew up listening to Pam.”

Even though the three women weren’t in the studio at the same time, Lee says the experience was unforgettable. “I did get to be in the studio with them both which made it so memorable. It’s a moment that I’ll never forget.”

Silver Threads and Golden Needles, Lee’s latest song is an amazing collaboration. The song was recorded by Wanda Jackson seventy years ago. Then in the 90s the song was recorded by Dolly, Tammy and Loretta as the Honky Tonk Angels. This classic song, loved by country fans, is reimagined with a powerful trio of voices. “I grew up listening to Tammy Wynette, Dolly Parton and Loretta Lynn, and I idolized those women growing up,” Lee says.

She reached out to Georgette Jones, daughter of George Jones and Tammy Wynette, and Heidi Parton, Dolly’s niece, to record the song together. Fate stepped in, Lee admits. “I had never met Georgette before. Then about a week later I was at this recording studio, and guess who’s coming out...Georgette. Heidi said she wanted to do one of Aunt Dolly’s songs and it would be fun. When I heard all three of our voices together, I was like, ‘Wow, this is pretty, awesome. There’s a God wink right there. It’s a super amazing collaboration.’”

The single released January 19, 2026, (Dolly’s 80th Birthday) with an all-star music video that aired this summer. These talented ladies performed Silver Threads together to a packed house and enthusiastic audience on May 29, at the Country Tonite Theatre in Pigeon Forge, Tennessee. “The three of us came together for something unforgettable, a rich blend of heart, harmony, and heritage. When you hear it, you’ll feel every ounce of that classic Country spirit shining through.”

Whether performing classic covers or original material, Lee Newton delivers a captivating performance every time. Lee has performed on shows with some of the most talented and legendary musicians including Ronnie Milsap, Randy Travis, Sara Evans, Ronnie McDowell, Diamond Rio, T. Graham Brown, The Oak Ridge Boys, and so many more.

Lee has earned multiple awards, including the Josie Music Awards - Vocalist, Album and Artist of the Year - and numerous other awards, accolades and nominations in the last several years. Just as Lee's daddy said, Lee performed and closed the show at the JMA's at the Grand Ole Opry House. She sang Carolina that she wrote about her upbringing with a replica of her dad's taxi hat beside her. "It was a very special moment! A night I will never forget. I know he was there in spirit." God honors our dreams and creates full circle moments such is the case of Lee Newton.

She has appeared on WSM's Coffee, Country & Cody, NBC's Today in Nashville, RFDTV, and numerous TV and podcast appearance and others. She earned an endorsement from Breedlove Guitars.

Lee's creativity doesn't stop at music. She is also a successful author, drawing from her childhood in Western North Carolina. Her children's books – "The Cab Driver's Daughter," "Blue Christmas," "Brenda Lee Learns Honesty," and "Fearless Brenda Lee" – all come from real memories. "I wrote four kid's books from my childhood that really taught me lessons and made me who I am today. Stories based on things that money can't buy, life lessons, and about my sweet daddy. I grew up with my daddy being a cab driver. I always joke, 'I'm not a coal miner's daughter...I'm the cab driver's daughter! It's about never giving up on your dreams, being that little girl, being bullied in school, and my teacher always being there to help me.'"

"Blue Christmas" is based on a true story of one of the greatest Christmases I ever had riding with daddy when I was six," she recalls. "It was Christmas Eve and it started snowing.

My dad didn't even know how he was going to get me Christmas that year. When he brought me back, I went to sleep, and this man he picked up ended up giving him a bunch of stuffed animals and a blue jacket. Daddy laid them around the couch that morning, and that became one of the greatest Christmases I ever had. In the book, I make it where we run into Santa Claus on the side of the road, and we give Santa a ride and Santa saves the day. It's a very sweet story about not taking things for granted." The Brenda Lee Series children's books were on the best sellers list on Amazon.

"Strength of a Woman, Heart of a Man," is a very personal book, Lee shares. "The book tells my story leading up to now. It tells my story of overcoming domestic violence and finding love and healing. It also tells my husband, Dale's story from my point of view, how God brought us together. It's a very sweet love story."

She has also released a cookbook filled with family recipes and stories. "I love to cook. Everybody kept saying, 'You need to do a cookbook.' This one is so cool because I tied in everything that means something to me, my music, and my family with little stories. It's not only a cookbook, it's full of precious memories and sentimental things I'm very proud of."

Lee Newton has been blessed with an amazing music career but there is more to this special lady. Lee is a devoted wife to fellow Country artist, Dale Houston, a loving mother to her children especially her little son Cash and a loyal friend. Her son, Cash, is already showing signs of following in his mother's footsteps. "He has it in his bones, whether it's comedian, actor, singer. He's got perfect pitch. I support him every step of the way. I don't want to persuade him, whatever he wants to do, I want to support him."

Lee has a huge presence on social media. She will brighten your day with her smile, warmth, and talent. "I've always just felt like my followers were friends. I call people my friends. We're all part of this journey. I truly appreciate everybody who has come along on this ride with me. What a beautiful ride this has been," Lee says. "If you had told me five years ago that I would do everything I've done, I would've been like, 'What?' The Good Lord guided me."

Faith is the foundation of Lee's life. "From the time I was small, my mom had me in church. I love Jesus and I've always had my faith. We always try to go our own way sometimes, but it's God's way, His timing and it's all His calling," she mentions. "In the last six years, when I was at my lowest and I hated that I had to be at my lowest before I finally said, 'Okay God, lead me, and I'll follow. I have been so close to my faith in these last six years. He's always been with me.'"

Lee concludes. "People say, 'Oh, you need to sing for the Lord in church.' I'm like, I sing for the Lord every day of my life, everywhere I go. It could be at a convenience store, a grocery store, anywhere. Reaching people with my music, my testimony – that's my mission and what God wants me to do."

Long before commanding stages, Brei was building a remarkable life defined by scholarship, leadership, and service. She earned a Bachelor's degree in Business from the University of Louisiana at Monroe, a Master's degree in International Relations from Webster University, and a Doctorate in Theology from New Foundation Theological Seminary. Away from the spotlight, Brei enjoys horseback riding and remains passionate about advocating for veterans and supporting those affected by mental health challenges.

Brei was named 'Artist of the Year' at the 9th Annual Mississippi Music Awards and earned a nomination for 'Modern Country Female Artist of the Year' at the Josie Music Awards in Nashville, Tennessee. A Retrospective Glimpse at Yesterday's Rising Music Stars
Who Became Icons and Where They Are Today

THIS EDITION: ABBA

Few Pop groups have shaped the sound of modern music quite like ABBA. After capturing the world's attention by winning the 1974 Eurovision Song Contest with Waterloo, the Swedish quartet - Agnetha Fältskog, Björn Ulvaeus, Benny Andersson, and Anni-Frid "Frid" Lyngstad - rose to global fame with a string of unforgettable hits. Songs like Dancing Queen, Mamma Mia, Take a Chance on Me, Fernando, and The Winner Takes It All turned them into international superstars, earning them countless awards and helping them sell hundreds of millions of records. Their unique blend of soaring harmonies, emotional storytelling, and flawless Pop craftsmanship made ABBA one of the most successful and enduring groups of all time.

Although the group stepped away from the spotlight in 1982, their popularity never faded. The massive success of the "ABBA Gold" compilation and the worldwide phenomenon of "Mamma Mia!" kept their music alive for new generations. Then, in a moment that stunned fans around the globe, ABBA reunited to release "Voyage," their first studio album in 40 years. The project led to ABBA Voyage, a groundbreaking digital concert experience in London featuring high-tech "ABBAtars" performing alongside a live band to sold-out crowds night after night.

Agnetha Fältskog now enjoys a peaceful life on her quiet farm on the island of Ekerö in Sweden, surrounded by nature and family. Though she has long valued her privacy, her love for music remains strong. She recently returned to the spotlight with her updated solo album "A+," introducing new songs like Where Do We Go From Here? to a fresh audience and reminding fans of her unmistakable voice.

Björn Ulvaeus continues to serve as ABBA's most active ambassador. As co-founder of Pop House Entertainment, he helped create ABBA The Museum and the immersive dining experience Mamma Mia! The Party. He also plays a major role in the global music industry as President of CISAC, advocating for creators' rights and representing ABBA at major milestones and celebrations around the world.

Benny Andersson remains the group's musical heartbeat. He continues composing for film and theater while overseeing the sound design and archival legacy of ABBA's catalog. He also stays active on stage, regularly touring and recording across Scandinavia with his 16-piece folk ensemble, Benny Anderssons Orkester, where he showcases his talents on piano and accordion.

Anni-Frid "Frid" Lyngstad, now Princess Reuss and Countess of Plauen, has stepped back from commercial recording to focus on philanthropy. Living primarily in Switzerland, she devotes her time to environmental causes and children's charities. Though retired from the music business, she remains a proud guardian of ABBA's legacy and makes selective public appearances with her former bandmates to mark important anniversaries and celebrations.

Today, ABBA's influence is stronger than ever. Their ABBA Voyage residency continues to draw sold-out crowds, blending cutting-edge technology with the magic of their classic hits - including Dancing Queen, which remains one of the most beloved and recognizable Pop songs in history. The group recently reunited to refresh the show's setlist with newly rendered tracks, proving that even after five decades, ABBA's bond remains unbroken and their music continues to shine with timeless brilliance.

BELLES of BLUE

A Legacy Still Singing

By Cory Parker

In the heart of Kentucky, where Bluegrass roots run deep and Gospel truth rings clear, two sisters carry forward a legacy born long before their group ever had a name. Belles of Blue, led by Nancy Decker and “Jolly” Dollie Slayton, is more than a Bluegrass Gospel ensemble - it is the continuation of a family calling that began on an old blue bus rolling through the Midwest.

Their story traces back to Willow Springs, Missouri, where the Singing Murdy Family lived out a ministry woven from Scripture, harmony, and the kind of faith that shapes generations. During the late 1970s and early 1980s, the Murdy family traveled from revival to revival, church to church, festival to festival, singing Bluegrass Gospel and preaching the good news. They performed everywhere from small rural congregations to Silver Dollar City in Branson, Missouri, carrying with them a sound that was unmistakably theirs - raw, heartfelt, and rooted in the Word.

All seven Murdy children grew up in that atmosphere. They learned to sing before they learned to speak, learned to harmonize before they learned to drive, and learned to minister before they ever understood the weight of ministry. Their parents taught them that music was not a performance but a calling, a way God reaches hearts that sermons alone sometimes cannot.

One of the family's final moments together came in Quincy, Illinois, when their mother gathered the adult children to record a Gospel television program for WTJR, a Christian Television Network affiliate. It was a treasured moment, one last unified offering before the passing of both a brother and their father. That memory still anchors the sisters today.

Nancy, the eldest of the seven, has spent more than fifty years writing and performing songs that carry the themes of faith, hope, and perseverance. A retired elementary school teacher, she now lives with her husband, Wayne, on their farm in Leitchfield, Kentucky, serving as an office administrator at Camp Loucon. Her life has always been a blend of ministry and melody.

Dollie, the youngest - born on the very bus the family traveled in - grew up surrounded by Gospel music and quickly developed her gift for harmony and songwriting. Today she and her husband, Joe, pastor Free Grace, Free Salvation Church in Edmonton, Kentucky, while she also serves at Wisdom Faith Academy. Her life, like Nancy's, is a seamless blend of faith, family, and music.

Though twenty years apart in age, God had a plan to bring them together. Nancy was already married and raising children when Dollie was born, yet years later she found herself teaching her younger sister to play upright bass in her Bluegrass band. What began as lessons soon became ministry. Before long, they were performing together, writing songs that combined biblical truth with everyday life - songs that felt lived-in, honest, and deeply personal.

Their songwriting partnership eventually expanded to include their sister Daisy Smith, creating a three-sister collaboration that continues to this day. Their greatest influence remains their parents, whose ministry taught them that music is not entertainment, it is a vessel God uses to reach the hurting, the searching, and the hopeful.

Nancy's songwriting career gained international attention in the mid-1990s when her original composition Sawmill Man from the Grogan & Company album "Songs About Home" was featured on Prime Cuts of Bluegrass and charted worldwide. It was a milestone that affirmed what her family had always known - Nancy had a gift for telling stories through song.

She has performed at iconic venues including The Station Inn, The Gibson Showcase, and The Lucy Opry, sharing stages with Bluegrass legends such as Uncle Josh Graves, Josh Graves Jr., and Kenny Baker. Yet despite these accomplishments, Nancy remains grounded in the same truth her parents taught her: the greatest stage is the one where someone's heart is changed.

Today, Belles of Blue continue that legacy through Sound Biscuit Records, releasing original Bluegrass Gospel music rooted in Scripture and personal testimony. Their sound is unmistakably theirs - rich family harmony, traditional Bluegrass instrumentation, and lyrics that point listeners toward Christ.

Like many independent artists, one of their greatest challenges has been building and maintaining a dedicated band. Finding musicians who share both the musical vision and the long-term commitment required for ministry is no small task.

"We have definitely put the work in, more than twenty years' worth," Nancy says.

The sisters are especially grateful for longtime mandolin player Jeffrey Woodard, who has faithfully traveled with them for nearly a decade. His consistency has helped anchor the group through seasons of change.

But the greatest reward is not found in applause, chart positions, or recognition. "Our greatest joy is knowing we're spreading the Good News of Jesus Christ and giving hope to people through our songs," Nancy says. "When someone tells us a song encouraged them or helped them through a difficult season, that's what it's all about."

Their first two Sound Biscuit releases - Black Heart and A Different Shade of Blue - introduced audiences to the depth of their message. Both songs drew from deeply personal experiences while pointing listeners toward the hope found in Christ.

Their newest single, Hebrew Children, continues that mission. Written by Nancy, the song retells the story of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego - three young men who stood firm before King Nebuchadnezzar and refused to bow. Nancy wanted an up-tempo Gospel number, but more importantly, she wanted to remind listeners that the same God who delivered the Hebrew children is still delivering His people today.

The message has resonated deeply, making Hebrew Children one of their most requested songs.

Dollie shares, "My testimony is called The Trained Up Trainwreck: The Story of the Preacher's Prodigal Daughter. I was raised in church by wonderful parents, but somewhere along the way I derailed. One day I cried out to God, 'I'm not my parents. I can't do what they did.' God gently reminded me, 'I didn't ask you to be your parents. I just want you to fulfill the purpose I created you for.' That moment changed my life. I surrendered completely to Jesus Christ. I prayed seven years for my husband's salvation, and today we both serve Him together. My prayer is that people understand God can use anyone, regardless of their past."

"I accepted Christ at five years old during a revival meeting," says Nancy. "That decision has carried me through every season of life. Nearly eight years ago I lost my husband of twenty-one years to suicide. During that dark season, God never let go of me. One day, in the middle of my grief, I clearly heard Him say, 'Be still and know that I am God.' From that moment, healing began. Today I've been able to minister to other widows who have experienced similar loss. Through our song A Different Shade of Blue, we share hope, encourage conversations about mental health, and remind people they are never alone."

The sisters often reflect on their father's legacy. Though many of his songs were never professionally published, people still sing them today. At his funeral, person after person stood to share how his music, friendship, and preaching had led them to Christ.

"We may never fully know who is changed by our music," Nancy says. "But if one person comes to know Jesus because of a song we've sung, then everything we've done has been worthwhile."

The Belles of Blue strive to remain faithful to the biblical values they were raised with. "We don't change depending on where we're playing," they say. "Whether we're in a church or at a Bluegrass festival, we're the same people. We believe God's Word is timeless."

Their desire is simple: to encourage families to stand firm in their faith, raise their children with biblical values, and remember that God is not the author of confusion.

Whether performing at a church, festival, or community event, audiences can expect rich family harmony, heartfelt testimony, traditional Gospel favorites, and original songs filled with biblical truth and encouragement.

"We're not just entertainers," the sisters say. "We're ministers. Every handshake, every smile, every conversation after a concert is another opportunity to point someone to Jesus Christ."

Their hope is that people leave every performance encouraged, strengthened in their faith, and reminded that God is still working in their lives today.

“IT’S ALL COMING BACK TO ME”

Vito Luprano Reveals the Stories Behind Celine Dion, the Hits, the Sacrifices, and a Career That Made Music History

Exclusive Interview by IGMP TV Network | The Isaiah Grass Show

Some people become legends in the spotlight. Others help create them from behind the scenes.

For decades, music executive and A&R leader Vito Luprano built a career around recognizing talent, finding the right songs, and trusting his instincts. While working at Sony Music, Luprano found himself at a pivotal point in his career when he was given the enormous responsibility of helping oversee and produce 20 albums for Celine Dion.

Now, with his memoir, “It’s All Coming Back to Me,” Luprano is finally telling his side of the story.

Luprano remembers the moment clearly. Before committing to the project, he wanted to hear Celine perform in English for himself. He attended a private corporate event, and the moment she began singing, he knew. “As soon as she opened her mouth and sang an English song, I said, ‘She’s going to be a star.’”

It wasn’t simply the power of her voice. Luprano recognized her ability to take a song and transform it. “She had an incredible ear. She would take that and emulate it but put in some of her own feel.”

From that point forward, Luprano understood his role: if Celine could deliver the performance, he needed to help find the songs worthy of that voice.

Because Celine wasn’t primarily writing her own material, it was important to find songs that felt authentic to her voice and personality. For Luprano, finding songs became one of the most important and enjoyable parts of the job. “Sometimes I had to listen to hundreds of songs. Sometimes I got it by the second song and found a hit.”

As Celine matured, he also believed her career needed to evolve. His message to René was direct: “We need to change her look, we need to change her sound, and we need to change her direction.”

One of the defining early examples was Where Does My Heart Beat Now. René initially wasn’t convinced. Luprano was. “I said, ‘No, René, listen to me. That’s why you came to Sony. That’s why you came to see me. We’re going to make this a Pop song, and it’s going to be great.’”

Once Celine recorded her vocal, Luprano knew they had something special. “Once she put her vocal on that song, I knew we had a hit.”

The excitement was immediate. “We were jumping like two kids.” Even hearing the rough mix was enough for Luprano to recognize what the song could mean. “I felt that would be the single that would open the door for us for the rest of our career.”

It was the kind of moment A&R executives spend their careers searching for: hearing the future before the rest of the world does.

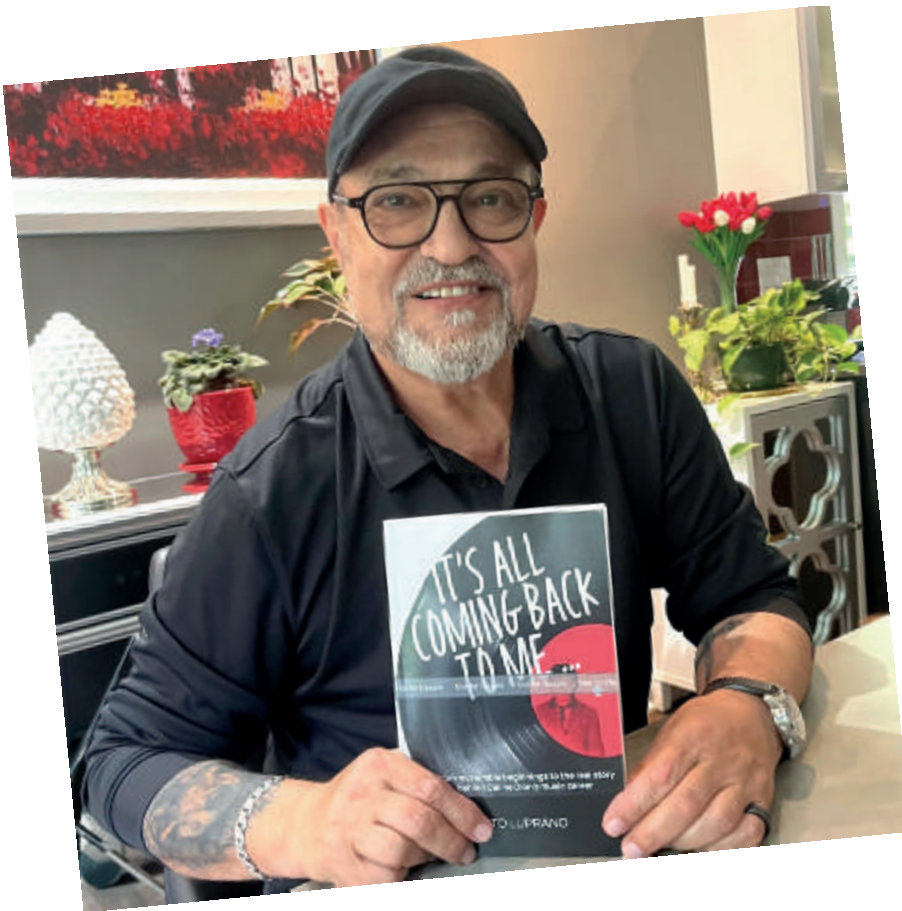

One of the most surprising stories in his memoir involves My Heart Will Go On. Celine initially did not want to record the song. “She really didn’t want to do it,” Luprano affirms.

Before Titanic, Celine had already experienced disappointment with movie music. She had recorded Dreams to Dream for An American Tail: Fievel Goes West, but Linda Ronstadt ultimately recorded the version used in the film.

Years later, composer James Horner had another potential movie song. This time, it was for Titanic. Celine wasn't convinced. René called Luprano, who suggested a compromise: "Let's do a demo on this song. If it doesn't come out right, we don't do it. If you like it after we do it, we commit." Celine agreed.

Luprano remembers the recording period becoming particularly emotional as Celine learned of Princess Diana's death. After watching the television coverage, he encouraged her to return to the studio. "I looked at her, she's crying, and I said, 'Hey, let's go back in and do the song.'"

Then came the performance. "When we went back in, that song was done in two." A song Celine initially didn't want to record would become one of the defining recordings of her career.

Luprano's story constantly returns to one word: perseverance. Long before the platinum records, international travel, recording studios, and celebrity encounters, Luprano faced a much different reality. By eighth grade, his family needed his help. "My mom came to me and said, 'You need to go to work because we need to sustain ourselves.'"

Leaving school frightened him. Without a diploma, he wondered what kind of future he could possibly build. Then he made a decision that would define his life. "That's when I decided that perseverance was going to be my diploma. Never quit. However scared I was, however worried, I would never quit."

That philosophy carried him through the uncertainty of his early years and eventually into rooms with some of the biggest names in entertainment.

After everything he achieved - the albums, awards, tours, and legendary artists - what accomplishment means the most to you? Luprano doesn't hesitate. "My biggest achievement is Celine Dion."

For him, that answer isn't simply about record sales or awards. It represents years of searching for songs, fighting for creative decisions, and believing in what Celine could become.

He remembers one moment when Celine's limousine had already left a recording studio before suddenly returning. She rolled down the window and called out to him: "Vito, I want you to know this album is because of you."

The words stayed with him. But extraordinary success also came with extraordinary sacrifice. Helping shape Celine Dion's career required years of dedication, travel, and time away from home.

Giving away so much of himself, how did this affect his life? His answer is remarkably candid. "I lost two wives because I was never there."

The demands of the industry also meant missing important years with his children. "My children were still small, so I missed a lot of their life."

At the same time, Celine's career had become deeply personal to him. "Celine, her career was like a child of mine too."

It is perhaps one of the clearest examples of what "It's All Coming Back to Me" reveals: behind the enormous achievements audiences celebrate are often deeply personal stories of sacrifice.

ONE MORE ALBUM?

After Luprano and Celine eventually parted ways, there was one particularly emotional reunion. When René passed away, Luprano attended the private funeral. "As soon as I saw Celine, she fell into my arms. She was crying."

Celine told him: "Vito, I don't know what to do."

They had not spoken in several years. Despite everything that happened, Luprano still considers their artistic relationship one of the defining partnerships of his life. "For me, Celine was my partner in the artistic side of her career."

And he still believes there could be one more chapter. Asked whether he would work with her again, his answer is immediate. "In my heart, I still have one more album I would love to do with her."

He has already thought about it. "I have the title. I have a couple of songs. I know what I could do with her."

Then comes the possibility that seems to leave the door open: “We’ll see if ever she calls me.”

THE STORY BEHIND THE MUSIC

Vito Luprano’s story may forever be connected to Celine Dion, but it is about more than a superstar. It is about the person listening when no one else hears the hit yet. The executive willing to fight for the right song. The man behind the recording glass while someone else stands beneath the spotlight. And the 11-year-old boy who eventually turned perseverance into his diploma.

When asked what he hopes readers ultimately take from his memoir, Luprano’s message is simple: “What I want them to take from the book is what I did: Never give up.”

For decades, Luprano helped find the songs that allowed another person’s voice to reach millions. Now, with “It’s All Coming Back to Me,” he finally gets to tell the story in his own voice.

GET THE BOOK

For Celine Dion fans, music lovers, aspiring artists, and anyone fascinated by what happens behind the scenes of the recording industry, “It’s All Coming Back to Me” takes readers deeper into Vito Luprano’s life, relationships, creative decisions, triumphs, sacrifices, and unforgettable years working alongside Celine Dion and René Angélil.

ARTHUR SUTTON & The Gift of Praise

The Sound of Legacy Lifted High

Arthur Sutton has spent a lifetime turning Chicago's gospel heartbeat into a global force, leading The Gift of Praise with the same fire he discovered as a 12-year-old bass player. His music crosses genres, cultures, and generations – all anchored in one mission: to lift every listener toward hope, truth, and the God who gave him the gift.

By Jackson McKee

Some artists carry music. Others carry a mission. For Arthur Sutton, founder, lead singer, bass player, and songwriter of Arthur Sutton & The Gift of Praise, the music is the mission - a lifelong calling shaped by Chicago's Gospel roots, sharpened by experience, and elevated by a deep conviction that praise can reach every heart, everywhere.

"I started the group in 1989 after a performance at the Chicago Gospel Festival," Sutton recalls. What began as a spark on a hometown stage grew into a powerhouse ensemble - a vibrant mix of men and women whose harmonies have traveled across the country and around the world. Their most recent recording, "Live in Chicago" (2025), captured the electricity of their ministry, and a new EP is already planned for 2027.

A Childhood Tuned to Purpose

Sutton's musical journey began at age twelve, bass in hand, playing for the Chicago Gospel quartet The Willing Four. It was there he learned not only musicianship but the art of songwriting. "I learned how to write songs watching Pastor James McClain," he says. McClain's guitar was tuned "Cross Spanish," and though he could only play tonic, four, and five, he wrote songs that carried power. That simplicity - paired with sincerity - shaped Sutton's own creative philosophy.

The 1970s brought another influence: Earth, Wind & Fire. "A lot of my songs had an EWF feel," he admits with a smile. Verdine White, EWF's legendary bassist, became a lifelong inspiration. Sutton still calls him "one of the greatest bass players of all time." The group's 1975 album with That's the Way of the World, Reasons, and Shining Star left such an imprint that Sutton named his own group The Gift of Praise in honor of the musical excellence that shaped him.

Moments That Mark a Lifetime

Among Sutton's most cherished memories is a night in 2008 that changed everything. As bass player and co-producer, he helped shape the debut recording of Janet Sutton & The Voices of Acme. Under the direction of his wife, Janet Sutton, the choir entered Verizon's national competition, How Sweet the Sound. What happened next still feels surreal.

"We played in front of 18,000 people in Atlanta at the Hawks arena," Sutton says. "We won first place and an award of $50,000. We were named the 'Best Choir in America.'"

It was a moment of triumph - not just for the choir, but for the man behind the bass, whose fingerprints were on every note.

A Career Crowned With Honors

Sutton's own discography reads like a map of divine favor:

- "I Got an Angel" - Billboard #5 and #8
 - "He Extended My Life" - #1 on Radio Airplay Experts Gospel Chart
 - "God Always Keeps His Promise" - #74 on MediaBase
- The group's newest single to radio is Wonderful God.

Sutton's mantle holds the Chicago Music Award (2024) and a place on the Chicago Wall of Fame (2025). He has been nominated for 'Best Quartet Group or Duo' by the Texas Gospel Music Awards and was named 'Artist of the Week' by 4evergospelradio.com.

Arthur Sutton & the Gift of Praise

But for Sutton, the true reward isn't the chart position - it's the connection. "Music is a universal language," he says. "It can transcend every cultural, social, moral, and spiritual issue."

The Heart Behind the Craft

Sutton's songwriting philosophy is simple, profound, and deeply human: "When writing your songs and music, always write from the heart. If you feel it - if it makes you feel good - that feeling will resonate with someone else's heart, soul, and spirit."

He also offers a gentle warning to fellow creatives: "Never criticize someone else's musical imagination or creativity. You can never predict what the listening audience will like and appreciate."

It's advice born from decades of experience, humility, and a genuine love for the craft.

A Mission Bigger Than Music

Sutton's vision for The Gift of Praise reaches far beyond stages and studios. "My mission and goal is to touch any and everybody in a positive way through my music and lyrics across the world," he says. "Not just the country - the world. Not just black or white - but every race, creed, color, and sexual preference."

A Gift of Praise concert is exactly what the name promises: a gift. "Fans can expect excitement, energy, contemporary and traditional compositions, with a message of love and humanity," Sutton explains. "Music that flows through every genre - Blues, Jazz, Hip-Hop, Rock & Roll, and Christian." It's gospel without borders. Praise without limits. Love without conditions.

A Legacy Still Rising

After nearly four decades of ministry, Arthur Sutton remains a student of music, a servant of God, and a vessel of praise. His story is one of perseverance, creativity, and unwavering faith - a reminder that when God places a calling on a life, He equips it with everything needed to touch the world.

And Arthur Sutton has done exactly that.

"Music is a universal language that can transcend every cultural, social, moral, and spiritual issue."

ARTIST SPOTLIGHT

STANLEY SIMMONS

By Jennifer Springs

A New Generation of Rock Royalty Steps Forward, Forging Their Own Path

Stanley Simmons isn't just a second-generation Rock project. It's a bold, new duo stepping confidently into their own lane. Evan Stanley and Nick Simmons, sons of KISS legends Paul Stanley and Gene Simmons, have launched their first-ever U.S. tour and released their debut album, "Dancing While the World Is Ending," which arrived August 28, 2026.

Evan and Nick grew up together on the road, their families connected through decades of KISS history. Over time, casual singing sessions turned into something more. They discovered a natural blend in their voices and a shared instinct for songwriting. What began as fun quickly became a serious creative partnership. Their first song, Temporary Love, written in early 2024, revealed how easily their ideas fit together. Within weeks, Stanley Simmons was born.

Though their fathers helped define one of Rock's most theatrical eras, Evan and Nick are building a fresh identity. Their music mixes acoustic warmth, Psych-Rock energy, and Garage-Rock grit, creating a modern, emotional style that stands apart from the KISS legacy.

Singles like Body Down, Temporary Love, Cellophane, and the title track Dancing While the World Is Ending highlight their tight harmonies and honest storytelling. Their newest single, Lilith, released August 10, adds a darker, cinematic edge, paired with a striking video directed by Greg Furman.

The album was produced by Rob Cavallo, known for shaping major records for Green Day, Fleetwood Mac, Paramore, and My Chemical Romance.

The duo performs under their real names - Stanley and Simmons - following the tradition of acts like Simon & Garfunkel, Hall & Oates, and Crosby, Stills & Nash. They've been clear that the name isn't a gimmick or a nod to their fathers' fame. It's simply who they are. "A name might get someone to listen once," Evan said. "But the music is what keeps them coming back."

Stanley Simmons made their live debut on May 4 at the House of Blues in San Diego, immediately earning praise for their chemistry and stage presence. The performance sparked excitement for what was coming next.

Their first full-scale U.S. tour kicks off September 14 at Three Links Deep Ellum in Dallas and wraps November 3 at the legendary Troubadour in West Hollywood. The duo will visit major cities including Austin, Nashville, New Orleans,

Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Denver, Seattle, and Portland, marking a major milestone in their rise. "The first Stanley Simmons tour is this fall," they shared. "We want to see all of you there, in real life."

"Dancing While the World Is Ending" features 12 original tracks shaped by emotional lyrics, strong harmonies, and a mix of acoustic and electric energy. Songs like Starve the Beast, Cold, Real Life Love, and Sing Myself to Sleep round out a project that feels both intimate and cinematic.

Stanley Simmons is stepping into the spotlight with confidence, ready to prove themselves on their own terms. Their debut album and national tour mark the beginning of a new chapter - one they're writing with honesty, heart, and a sound that's unmistakably theirs.

Music

By Elise Carrington
Music Industry Analyst

The music industry enters the fall season in a state of restless reinvention. What once moved in predictable cycles now shifts in rapid, data-driven waves, reshaped by AI tools, indie innovation, and the rise of digital micro-markets that operate like miniature worlds within the larger musical landscape. As artists, labels, and fans navigate this new terrain, one truth is becoming clear: the future of music will be defined not by size, but by precision, connection, and the power of niche communities.

THE QUIET REVOLUTION

By the time September settles over Nashville, you can feel it - a shift humming beneath the surface of the industry. Studios aren't as crowded as they used to be. Laptops glow late into the night. And the artists climbing the charts aren't always backed by the traditional machine. They're backed by algorithms, niche communities, and a new wave of digital craftsmanship that didn't exist five years ago.

The music industry isn't simply evolving. It's splintering - beautifully - into thousands of thriving rivers. This is the new gold rush. And it's happening right now.

For decades, the industry moved in predictable cycles: album releases, radio pushes, tour announcements, chart climbs. But 2026 has broken the pattern. The old gatekeepers still matter, but they no longer control the flow. The new power centers are digital, decentralized, and shockingly democratic.

And the artists who understand this are rising faster than anyone expected.

THE AI ACCELERATION

Walk into any modern studio and you'll see it: AI isn't replacing producers. It's accelerating them.

A songwriter in Franklin can generate a demo arrangement in minutes. A producer in Muscle Shoals can test five different drum tones before lunch. An engineer in Atlanta can restore a damaged vocal with a precision that once required a full team and a full day.

AI has become the quiet co-writer, the invisible engineer, the assistant who never sleeps.

But the biggest misconception is that AI is making music less human. In reality, it's doing the opposite. By removing tedious technical barriers, artists have more time to focus on emotion, storytelling, and performance.

“AI isn't taking the soul out of music - it's giving artists more time to put soul into it.”

Industry analysts estimate that AI-assisted production has increased indie release volume by 30 - 40% in 2026. That surge is reshaping the charts, the touring landscape, and the very definition of what it means to be an artist in the digital age.

And it's not just the creation process. AI is influencing marketing, fan engagement, and even tour routing. Artists can now analyze audience clusters, predict ticket demand, and tailor setlists to regional preferences - all before stepping on stage.

The future isn't automated. It's augmented.

THE INDIE POWER SURGE

The indie revolution isn't a trend. It's a takeover. Artists are no longer waiting for a label to discover them. They're building their own lanes, their own audiences, and their own economies. Direct-to-fan platforms have become miniature ecosystems. Subscription communities are replacing traditional fan clubs. Micro-label collectives are forming in cities that once had no industry footprint at all. The new model isn't “get signed.” It's “get seen by the right ten thousand people.”

National music charts reflect this shift more clearly than ever. Independent artists are charting at a rate not seen in over a decade, and they're doing it with authenticity, speed, and a direct connection to fans that major labels can't always replicate.

One indie artist recently stated, “I don't need a million fans. I need ten thousand who care.” That philosophy is rewriting the rules.

“Indie isn't underground anymore - it's the new mainstream.”

The rise of indie power is also changing the economics of music. Artists are earning more per fan, retaining ownership of their masters, and building sustainable careers without sacrificing creative control.

The industry used to reward mass appeal. Now it rewards identity.

THE AGE OF MICRO-MARKETS

Perhaps the most fascinating trend of 2026 is the rise of micro-markets - small, passionate communities that operate like miniature genres within genres.

- Christian acoustic micro-markets.
- Southern Gospel nostalgia micro-markets.
- Country-Pop crossover micro-markets.
- TikTok-driven micro-markets.
- Vinyl collector micro-markets.
- Regional touring micro-markets.

Each one has its own stars, its own sound, its own economy.

The Indie Economy at a Glance

The independent music sector has become the most dynamic force in the industry's post-pandemic recovery. What began as a grassroots movement has matured into a self-sustaining economy powered by direct-to-fan engagement, digital analytics, and creative autonomy.

By the Numbers (2026):

- 42% of charting artists now release music independently - up from 27% in 2020.
- Average revenue per fan for indie artists has risen 38% since 2022, driven by subscription communities and personalized merch drops.
- Direct-to-fan platforms such as Bandcamp, Patreon, and Fanhouse report year-over-year growth exceeding 50%.
- The top three indie genres by streaming volume: Christian Acoustic, Country-Pop crossover, and Alt-Folk revival.
- Independent labels collectively account for one-third of global streaming revenue, a milestone once thought impossible.

The Takeaway: Indie isn't a side lane anymore - it's the highway. Artists who understand their audience and own their data are building careers that rival major-label stability while keeping creative control firmly in their hands.

The industry used to be one giant ocean. Now it's a constellation of rivers, each one thriving, each one carving its own path.

- For artists, this is liberation.
- For fans, it's discovery.
- For the industry, it's a new frontier.

Micro-markets are also influencing production styles. A worship artist in Texas may tailor their sound to a specific regional audience. A Country-Pop singer in Georgia may release acoustic versions exclusively for a micro-market that values stripped-down authenticity. A Gospel trio in North Carolina may create vinyl-only releases for collectors who crave nostalgia.

The future of music isn't broad. It's precise.

THE NEW TOURING ECONOMY

Fall touring in 2026 looks different - and smarter. Artists are choosing intimate venues, regional circuits, and 20-city micro-tours instead of massive 60-city runs. The result? Lower overhead, higher engagement, and more profitable nights.

Fans aren't just attending concerts. They're joining communities.

The touring model has shifted from spectacle to connection, and artists who embrace this are seeing stronger merch sales, deeper loyalty, and repeat attendance.

One promoter said, "A 500-seat room can be more profitable than a 5,000-seat arena if the audience is invested." That's the new reality.

"The best seat in the house is no longer in the arena. It's in the room where the artist can see your face."

Touring is also being shaped by data. Artists can now identify pockets of superfans, optimize travel routes, and build tours around micro-markets instead of major cities. This shift is democratizing live music and giving smaller communities access to artists they once only saw online.

THE VINYL REVIVAL

Vinyl isn't a novelty anymore. It's a statement. Collectors want limited runs, colored pressings, signed editions, and packaging that feels like art. Christian, Country, and Gospel markets are driving some of the strongest growth in physical media.

A vinyl release isn't just a product. It's a moment.

- It's nostalgia you can hold.
- It's identity you can display.
- It's music you can feel.

Micro-Markets to Watch

The fragmentation of the music landscape has created a new class of niche communities - micro-markets that operate like self-contained ecosystems with their own stars, aesthetics, and economic engines. These emerging pockets of influence are shaping release strategies, touring routes, and even production styles.

Faith-Based Indie Pop

A growing wave of young artists blending worship sincerity with Indie-Pop textures. This micro-market thrives on authenticity, bedroom-studio intimacy, and deeply loyal digital communities. Streaming numbers are rising fastest among listeners ages 18-29.

Southern Gospel Nostalgia Circuit

Fueled by vinyl collectors, legacy fans, and regional touring halls, this micro-market is experiencing a quiet renaissance. Artists who lean into harmony-driven arrangements and classic quartet energy are finding strong merch sales and repeat attendance.

TikTok-Driven Acoustic Revival

Short-form platforms have birthed a new acoustic movement built on stripped-down performances, storytelling, and emotional immediacy. Artists who can deliver raw, one-take moments are converting viral clips into ticket sales and chart traction.

Alt-Country Micro-Labels

Small collectives in Tennessee, Georgia, and the Carolinas are producing Alt-Country acts with a modern edge. These micro-labels operate like creative families - releasing vinyl-first projects, hosting intimate showcases, and cultivating fiercely devoted fanbases.

Collector-Focused Vinyl Communities

Not a genre, but a market. Limited pressings, colored variants, and signed editions are driving demand across Christian, Country, and Americana spaces. Artists who create vinyl-exclusive tracks are seeing some of the highest per-unit revenue in the indie sector.

The Takeaway: Micro-markets aren't side roads - they're emerging highways. Artists who understand the culture, language, and expectations of their niche are building careers with stability, identity, and long-term fan investment.

WHAT THIS MEANS FOR ARTISTS IN 2026

The industry is rewarding authenticity, speed, and niche identity. The artists who thrive in this new era will be the ones who stop chasing the old mainstream and start building their own micro-market kingdom.

The future belongs to the artist who knows exactly which room they're meant to be in - and who isn't afraid to make that room their entire world.

Success in 2026 isn't about being everywhere. It's about being deeply somewhere.

THE NEW ERA

The music industry isn't shrinking. It's multiplying. And as Artists are responding by creating vinyl-exclusive tracks, alternate mixes, and deluxe editions that never appear on streaming platforms. This strategy not only boosts revenue but strengthens fan loyalty.

Vinyl is no longer retro. It's relational.

fall arrives, one truth is becoming impossible to ignore: The next generation of stars won't be defined by the size of their audience, but by the strength of their connection.

RADIOHEAD

THE BAND THAT REFUSED TO BE FAMOUS

How Radiohead Rewrote the Rules of Modern Rock by Walking Away From the Spotlight

By Soren Blake

Fame was never the plan. Not for Radiohead. Not for five young men from Oxford who stumbled into global stardom with a song they didn't even want to play live. Their story is one of the strangest arcs in Rock history; a band that became massive by accident, then spent the next three decades trying to escape the gravitational pull of their own success.

In an era obsessed with virality, Radiohead's rise feels almost mythic: a band that refused to be famous, and somehow became legendary.

When Creep exploded in 1993, Radiohead was thrust into a spotlight they never asked for. The song became an anthem for alienation, blasting across radio stations, MTV rotations, and college dorm stereos. But behind the scenes, the band felt trapped.

They were being defined by a single track - one that didn't represent their identity, their ambition, or their sound. Thom Yorke famously grew to resent it, calling it "a curse," and the band began leaving it off setlists entirely.

Most artists would cling to a global hit. Radiohead ran from it. That decision - that refusal - became the first crack in the mold they would eventually shatter.

By 1997, Radiohead had reinvented themselves. "OK Computer" wasn't just a new album; it was a declaration. A cinematic, dystopian, emotionally charged masterpiece that captured the anxiety of a world speeding toward digital overload.

It was Rock, but not Rock. It was Alternative, but not Alternative. It was something else. Something prophetic.

The album's success proved that Radiohead didn't need Creep. They didn't need radio formulas. They didn't need to chase trends. They could build their own universe, and listeners would follow. But even then, fame still felt like a cage.

In 2000, Radiohead did the unthinkable. They abandoned guitars. They abandoned choruses. They abandoned the entire idea of what a Rock band should sound like.

"Kid A" was a ghostly, electronic, fragmented dream-scape - a record that seemed designed to confuse the mainstream. Critics didn't know what to do with it. Fans didn't know what to expect. And yet, it debuted at No. 1.

Radiohead had disappeared from the spotlight only to find themselves standing at the center of it again. Their refusal to play the fame game became the very thing that made them iconic.

Over the next decade, Radiohead perfected the art of controlled absence. They released albums without warning. They bypassed labels. They let fans choose their own price for "In Rainbows." They toured when they felt like it, not when the industry demanded it. They became the band that didn't promote, didn't explain, didn't chase.

And somehow, the world leaned in closer. Their silence became part of the mythology. Their distance became part of the allure. Their refusal became their brand.

Today, Radiohead stands as one of the most influential Rock bands of the last 30 years. Not because they embraced fame, but because they rejected it.

Their legacy is built on:

- reinvention over repetition

- artistry over expectation
- mystery over marketing
- integrity over industry pressure

They proved that a band can be massive without being accessible, experimental without being obscure, and private without being forgotten. Radiohead didn't just survive fame. They outsmarted it.

Radiohead performing in Madrid in November 2025 on their 2025 tour.
It was their first tour in seven years.

In a world where artists are told to post constantly, promote endlessly, and chase algorithms, Radiohead's journey feels almost rebellious. They remind us that:

- authenticity still matters
- mystery still captivates
- reinvention still inspires
- and fame is not the goal - the work is

Their refusal to be famous became the very thing that made them unforgettable. Radiohead didn't just change Rock. They changed the rules.

T. G. Sheppard & Kelly Lang

Two Voices, One Heart - A Lifetime of Music

By Robin Tanner

T.G. Sheppard and Kelly Lang share one of Country music's most heartfelt partnerships, blending more than two decades with two thriving careers. Their relationship is rooted in mutual respect, deep faith, and a genuine friendship that shines both onstage and off. T.G., a Country legend with twenty-two number-one hits, continues to captivate audiences with his smooth, signature sound, while Kelly, an acclaimed singer-songwriter, producer, author, and 23-year breast cancer survivor, brings creativity and emotional honesty to everything she does. Their marriage is the quiet strength behind their artistry, and their artistry reflects the love they share.

When T.G. and Kelly step up to a microphone together, their blend is effortless. Their collaborative releases - including "Iconic Duets," "Chemistry: The Duets Collection," and their holiday album "Tender Tennessee Christmas" - showcase that natural chemistry.

Kelly Lang's songs have been recorded by Country legends including Ricky Skaggs, Lorrie Morgan, The Oak Ridge Boys, Crystal Gayle, George Jones, B.J. Thomas, Jimmy Fortune, Jerry Lee Lewis, T.G. Sheppard, and Johnny Lee. She has recorded duets with icons such as Barry Gibb, Olivia Newton-John, Paul Shaffer, and Lee Greenwood, and has released a string of acclaimed albums.

A member of the Oklahoma Music Hall of Fame, Lang's music has also reached national audiences through television, with her song I'm Not Going Anywhere serving as the official anthem for Ascension Hospital, and her autobiography of the same name. Her popular song, Under A Tennessee Moon was named an official state song of Tennessee, and she made her solo debut on the Grand Ole Opry stage in 2023.

Beyond music, Lang is a painter, speaker, and entertainer, drawing inspiration from her journey as a 23-year breast cancer survivor to create music and art that inspires and uplifts audiences nationwide.

Kelly is celebrating the release of her new album "Jealous Green Eyes," featuring eleven self-penned or co-written tracks, including a duet with Jimmy Fortune. "I've never been more excited to share new music with you than I am with my brand-new album, 'Jealous Green Eyes,'" she says. "Every song on this record tells a story from a different chapter of my life."

She shares insights on several of the album's singles. "HollyWould is a song I co-wrote with Lee Roy. One day we were just talking about how comparable the music business was to Hollywood, it's not very different. People will sell themselves to get into Country music too. The song was a little risqué for me to put on prior albums. This album is more PG-13, and it's just a little contemporary. It really fit this project really well, along with the other songs."

Another standout track is her playful answer song to T.G.'s hit I Loved 'Em Every One. "Since T.G. and I have been together, I heard on a weekly basis, 'Oh! Your husband loved them everyone, how does that make you feel?' It's just a silly question about the song. I thought, I'm going to record my own version. I wrote it a few years back with Mark Oliverius. It's called I Never Met a Man I Didn't Love. It's about naming all types of men that checked all the boxes. It's basically kind of a little joke back to T.G. It was a really fun song."

T.G. laughs as he adds, "For years, I kept waiting for someone to come up with an 'answer' song to my hit I Loved 'Em Every One. I never dreamed it would be my better half, Kelly, who would write it and perform it. The first time I heard it, I was totally shocked at how well she had crafted the song while making it her own. Hope everyone enjoys it as much as I do."

Kelly's signature emotional storytelling shines on the uplifting track This Too Shall Pass. "It seems like everyone is carrying some kind of storm these days. I wrote the song as a reminder to hold on just one more day because brighter days are ahead. But one of my favorite parts of the song is the reminder to hold on to the good times, too, because they also pass by so quickly. At its heart, it's a song of hope, encouragement, and resilience, something I think we could all use a little more of these days," Kelly states. "T.G. is moved to tears every time he hears it." (The album is available now and view the amazing video to these songs on Youtube.)

T.G.'s own story reads like a Country song. Growing up in Humboldt, Tennessee as Bill Browder, he knew early on that music was more than a hobby. He left home at fifteen and headed to Memphis, where a certain night would change his life forever. "It was just meant to be when I was a kid that night at the skating rink, I would meet Elvis Presley and we would become friends," he recalls. "I used to tell my mother that I would meet Elvis and we would become friends. My mother would say, 'Now son, don't get your hopes up too much because the chances of you meeting him, let alone becoming a close friend, is really bad.' When I met him that night at the skating rink, it was already written in a book years before. I just happened to be at the right place, at the right time. It was a great night and a great friendship with him." God gives us the desires of our hearts if we believe, such is the case, from a little boy who knew he would one day meet his favorite performer and enjoy a lasting friendship until Elvis passed away.

Working in various bands under the name Brian Stacy, he released his first record, "High School Days," in 1966, which led to opening shows for The Animals, Jan & Dean, and The Beach Boys. Later, using his given name, Bill Browder, he became one of the most successful record promoters with RCA and in the industry. His ear for hits eventually led him to record Devil in the Bottle himself. Signed to Motown and now going by T.G. Sheppard, the song became a number-one hit.

He laughs remembering how Elvis found out it was he who recorded the song. "I didn't want to tell Elvis because I was signed with Motown and it was a #1 record. I didn't want to lose my job at RCA because it would be a conflict of interest. I was coming in the back door of Graceland one day, and Elvis was sitting in the Jungle Room. He said, 'Bill, you could've told me that you were that Sheppard guy singing that song I like, on the radio.' I said obviously, I couldn't tell you because I was afraid that I'd lose my job with RCA. Elvis said, 'Don't you know I am RCA!'"

Since that first hit, he has received several awards, including 'Best New Male Artist' by Cash Box in 1976 and 'Most Promising Male Vocalist' by Music City News in 1982, and numerous nominations. T.G.'s legendary career spanned more than fifty years with twenty-two number-one hits, including Last Cheaters Waltz, War Is Hell (On the Homefront), Only One You, Party Time, I Loved 'Em Every One, Fooled Around And Fell In Love and many more classic fan favorites. When asked about his favorite songs to perform, T.G. says. "It would have to be Slow Burn, the melody of that song just sticks with me. Then of course, I love Party Time, and Do You Want to Go to Heaven would have to be a few of my favorites that I really enjoy singing. I love live performing, I love connecting with the people on stage and in the audience. That is a great joy and I never take it for granted."

As T.G. continues his 50th anniversary tour with several dates featuring Kelly, his career also included serving as national spokesperson for the Folgers NASCAR racing team and hosting the 'Folgers' Wakin' Up Country Tour' for six years. His voice was heard in many TV commercials. He's had at least twenty studio albums with his last recording, "Midnight In Memphis."

Sheppard has lived a life filled with extraordinary moments, the kind most artists only dream about. "Getting a chance to play the White House a couple of times, two different presidents, who was really special to me," he says. "I never dreamed I'd get a chance to play the White House, let alone meet the presidents."

He has shared memories with legendary artists that shaped his legendary career. But one stands above the rest. "I guess meeting Elvis was probably one of those things in my life, it's just been so many of them." His journey has been marked by milestones that reflect not only his talent, but the remarkable places music has carried him.

Kelly Lang has her own unforgettable highlights, moments that remind her how far her voice and artistry have taken her. "I was so thrilled to be asked to sing with Barry Gibb to induct Kenny Rogers into the Country Music Hall of Fame. That was a really special night," she shares. "And then the next night, sing on the Opry with him." Her career has also given her the chance to record with one of her dearest friends. "Doing a duet with Olivia Newton-John" she says with a smile. These experiences, historic stages, legendary artists, and cherished friendships have become treasured chapters in Kelly's story, each one adding to the rich tapestry of her life in music.

Through it all, T.G. and Kelly credit their marriage and their faith for keeping them grounded. "I just think respecting your spouse and doing everything you can to make your partner happy," T.G. says. "I am very blessed to have Kelly as my wife, and I let her know that every day. I think one of the main things is don't take your partner for granted and I don't. She is quite a force. I mean she is not just a singer and songwriter, she's a painter, record producer. She does it all and I am very proud of her."

Kelly adds, "Like a good sense of humor, we laugh a lot. We kind of keep to ourselves. We don't go out to a lot of parties, we just like each other's company. I suggest, marry your best friend, and if you do, that will carry you a long way."

Their bond deepened even further during Kelly's battle with breast cancer. "I was sobbing and sick. I said, if you're not committed to me, I think it's your time to go. I probably wouldn't stay either. He said absolutely not! He ended up hanging with me at all the doctor's visits and he just loved me back through it. That's stronger than any marriage certificate."

Kelly also found strength in her friendship with Olivia Newton-John. "She wrote the foreword in my book. I never really talked much about my cancer diagnosis. I just kind of got it done fast as I could and never wanted to embrace it. She taught me to not only embrace it, but it's not worth anything if you don't help others with that knowledge. She was very encouraging. Take out all the negatives in your life that would cause any type of anxiety and protect your spirit. I learned a lot of really great tips from her."

Faith remains central in their home. "God lives at our house, we talk to Him every day," T.G. says. "I don't think we could have been in the business that we're in. You have to have thick skin to survive in this business."

"If you've got God's armor, you're gonna be fine." Kelly adds, "I can't imagine a day without Him."

Together, T.G. Sheppard and Kelly Lang continue to inspire fans with their music, their faith, and the unwavering love that carries them through every chapter of life and grateful for every moment.

ARTIST SPOTLIGHT

ROCKIE & TAMIE

A Duet of Grace and Fire

In the foothills of North Carolina, where faith and music mingle like mountain air and morning light, Rockie & Tamie stand as living proof that real strength comes when you finally let God lead. Married in December 2024, this dynamic duet has turned their shared calling into a ministry that radiates hope, joy, and unstoppable energy. Whether behind a pulpit or beneath stage lights, they merge dynamic preaching and heartfelt music into one seamless expression of the Gospel - honest, passionate, and alive.

From their home in Advance, North Carolina, where they pastor Kernersville Full Gospel Mission, Rockie & Tamie balance family, faith, and creativity with remarkable grace. Between church services and concert tours, they also helm Un-Marked Road Studios, a space where their message of redemption becomes melody. Their journey has earned them multiple awards and chart-topping singles across the Christian and Country Gospel landscape, yet they call every accolade a simple “God Hug,” a reminder that Heaven celebrates obedience more than fame.

Tamie’s voice first rose in childhood, a little girl certain that God had placed a song in her heart. By 1996 she was singing solo later spending a decade with the vocal group Amazed under Morning Star Records/The Eddie Crook Company.

Rockie’s rhythm began even earlier - playing drums behind his father at age 3, recording his first solo project at 7, touring with the Easter Brothers at 10, and preaching by 12. “I believe I was born to be in ministry,” he says, and his life proves it.

Their catalog reads like a chronicle of faith in motion.

- He Keeps the Son Shining - #1 on Pure Gospel Radio (June–July 2026)
- Write a Christmas Song - #1 on AirPlay Express Christmas Chart (2025)
- This One’s for You - #1 in Cashbox Magazine (September 2026)

Each track carries a story, none more poignant than This One’s for You, inspired by their friend Gary Rayburn of Lonesome Road Ministries. “To know that the song is a true testimony of such a great man with such a powerful ministry takes the excitement to a new level,” they share. Their upcoming single, Even If, Keep Holding On, written during a season of hardship, has already become a congregational anthem - a reminder that even in pain, praise endures.

Both have walked valleys that shaped their ministry. In 2011, Rockie lost his two sons, Dylan and Zack - a grief that could have silenced him but instead deepened his compassion. Tamie, too, faced life-altering trials. Together they discovered that God redeems every surrendered life, weaving mercy through every scar. “We believe He can and will,” they affirm, “when we surrender to His will.”

Three children, seven grandchildren, and countless souls touched, Rockie & Tamie’s greatest reward isn’t applause but the privilege of praising God together. Every service, every concert, every handshake after a show is sacred ground. Their prayer is simple: that people will feel the anointing of God and leave saying, “We had an awesome time of worship.”

In a world hungry for authenticity, Rockie & Tamie remind us that the Gospel still sings - sometimes through tears, sometimes through triumph, always through love. Their duet is more than harmony; it’s a heartbeat of revival echoing across every stage they grace.

Chris Golden Finds the Extraordinary in Ordinary Life on New Album...

Witness
CHRIS GOLDEN

Award-winning Nashville Musician Returns with First Solo Album in Six Years

By Cory Parker

Some albums entertain. Others tell stories. Chris Golden's new album, WITNESS, does something even rarer - it uncovers the fingerprints of God in ordinary life.

A grandfather's faithful prayers. A weathered church piano. A Tuesday blue plate special. A mother praying. A better man looking back with gratitude instead of regret. Those are the stories that make up WITNESS, Golden's first full-length solo album in six years.

An ICMA 'Instrumentalist of the Year' and 'Producer of the Year,' Golden produced, recorded, edited, and mixed the album at his House Of Music, Ent. studio in Gallatin, Tennessee. He also performed many of the instruments throughout the project, making WITNESS one of the most personal recordings of his four-decade career.

The album's first radio single, Piano For Sale, is already impacting Christian Country and Southern Gospel radio. The accompanying video for The Man Upstairs, filmed across Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, and South Dakota, reminds viewers that God's presence isn't confined to a church building - it can be found in creation, in everyday moments, and in the lives of ordinary people.

Known as a founding member of The Golden's, a 17-year member of The Oak Ridge Boys band, and for his work with Alabama and Restless Heart, Golden has spent more than forty years making music. His previous solo album, "Grateful," produced seven No. 1 songs, while the years between solo projects were filled with producing three acclaimed albums with William Lee Golden & The Golden's, solo projects for two of his three talented children, Elizabeth and Elijah Golden, recording other artists, and maintaining a busy nationwide touring schedule.

But WITNESS isn't built around career accomplishments. It's built around stories. Stories of grace after failure. Of prayers passed from one generation to the next. Of finding home. Of becoming a better man. Of recognizing God in both mountaintop moments and ordinary Tuesdays.

Reflecting on the project, Golden says, "After all of these years I've never really changed my style of music. It's still my brand of Country. It's still storytelling, and it's still played with my heart and soul. The difference is the message. Today, every song points people to hope, faith, and Jesus."

Golden is quick to describe himself as an entertainer, not an evangelist. But he also believes music has the unique ability to prepare hearts. "I've always believed a great song can stay with someone long after the music stops. If these stories remind someone they're loved, encourage them to forgive, inspire them to call home - whether here on earth, or our heavenly home, or help them see God's hand in their own life, then the songs have done exactly what I hoped they would do."

Featuring songs such as Where My People Are, The Man Upstairs, Granddaddy's Prayers, He Loves Me Anyway, A Better Man, Everybody Talks to God, Don't Wait, and the current single Piano For Sale, WITNESS is more than an album. It's a collection of life stories that quietly point listeners toward the hope that has sustained Chris Golden throughout his own journey.

More than forty years into his career, Golden isn't trying to reinvent himself. He's simply telling the stories that matter most.

ICON SERIES

Celebrating the Legends

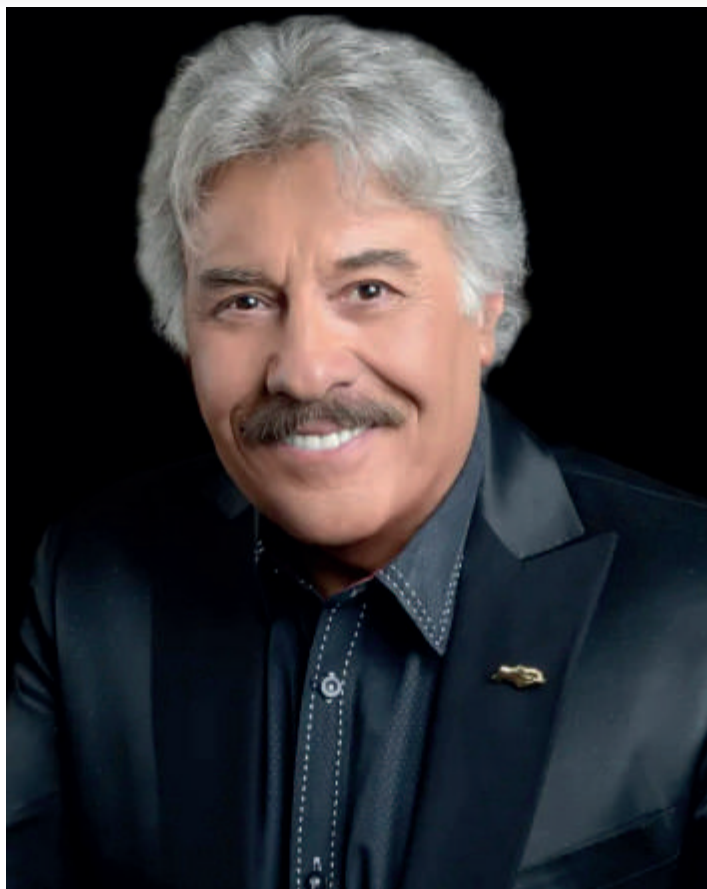

This Edition
TONY ORLANDO

Few artists in American popular culture have woven themselves so completely into the nation's musical, television, and humanitarian fabric as Tony Orlando. For more than six decades, his voice, presence, and patriotism have touched millions. His story is one of chart-topping success, resilience, generosity, and a lifelong devotion to lifting others up.

Staff, Cashbox

Tony Orlando was born April 3, 1944, in New York City, and grew up in Manhattan, New York before his family moved to New Jersey. His rise began astonishingly early. As a teenager, he became the first vocal Pop artist ever signed to Epic Records, earning his first national chart appearance in 1961 with Halfway to Paradise. His early career unfolded in the bustling New York music scene, where he quickly gained a reputation as a gifted vocalist and natural communicator. Even before superstardom, he was deeply embedded in the industry, serving as General Manager and Vice President of CBS's April-Blackwood Music from 1966 to 1970. During that time, he represented and developed artists such as James Taylor, Laura Nyro, and Blood, Sweat & Tears, and produced Barry Manilow's first recording. These formative years revealed a versatile and ambitious young man whose talents extended far beyond the microphone.

The 1970s cemented Tony Orlando as a household name with five #1 hit records including, Knock Three Times, Candida, My Sweet Gypsy Rose, He Don't Love You (Like I Love You), and the cultural landmark Tie A Yellow Ribbon 'Round the Ole Oak Tree. Yellow Ribbon, the #1 Billboard Song of 1973, grew into an American anthem of hope, homecoming, and renewal.

The success of Tony Orlando & Dawn, featuring Telma Hopkins and Joyce Vincent Wilson, led to one of television's most beloved variety programs. The Tony Orlando and Dawn Show aired on CBS from 1973 to 1977, breaking barriers as the first network variety show to feature a multi-racial singing group and making Orlando the first and only Latin American to host such a series.

Throughout Orlando's prenominal music career, he has recorded numerous albums and sold over 100 million records over several decades. Tony has performed for millions of adoring audiences - from U.S. bases and Iraq to his own theatre in Branson, Carnegie Hall, Las Vegas, and the White House and has worked for several U.S. Presidents.

As he entered his sixth decade in entertainment, Orlando launched new projects including hosting "Saturday Nights with Tony Orlando" on 77 WABC Music Radio, airing from 10 p.m. to midnight and streaming worldwide. He also released “Timeless: The Big Hits” through Time Life, featuring re-recorded versions of his million-selling songs and a bonus track, America Is My Hometown. Fittingly, he debuted the new track on 77 WABC, the same station that first played Halfway to Paradise when he was a teenager.

Tony Orlando’s achievements have been recognized with some of the industry’s highest honors. He has received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, the American Eagle Lifetime Achievement Award for Latin performers, the Ellis Island Medal of Honor, the Lee Greenwood Patriot Award, two American Music Awards, and the People’s Choice Award for ‘Best Male Entertainer.’ In 2022, he received the Lifetime Achievement Award from the East Coast Music Hall of Fame, and in 2023 he was inducted into the New Jersey Hall of Fame at the New Jersey Performing Arts Center. He has also been awarded ‘Casino Entertainer of the Year’ and ‘Best All Around Entertainer’ multiple times in both Las Vegas and Atlantic City.

His dedication to America’s veterans is one of the most profound aspects of his legacy. For more than fifty years, he has performed for troops around the world and helped raise millions for military and veterans’ causes. His connection to Vietnam POWs is especially meaningful. In 1973, at Bob Hope’s invitation, he performed Tie A Yellow Ribbon at the Cotton Bowl for nearly 600 returning POWs, and he has attended their annual reunions for half a century.

In 1993, Orlando began his Free Veterans Day Homecoming Celebration at his Yellow Ribbon Music Theatre in Branson, Missouri, a tradition that continued for twenty years. He is credited with helping bring more than 175,000 veterans to Branson each November during Veterans Homecoming Week. On November 8, 2022, Branson Mayor Larry Milton declared “Tony Orlando Yellow Ribbon Day” and presented a proclamation honoring his decades of service. He has served on the boards of the Eisenhower Foundation and the Tribute to Valor Foundation, and has been Master of Ceremonies for numerous Medal of Honor events and the Secretary of Defense Freedom Awards. His humanitarian honors include the Bob Hope Award for Excellence in Entertainment from the Congressional Medal of Honor Society.

In 2026, Tony Orlando announced his retirement from touring after more than sixty-two years on stage. His farewell concerts became a celebration of a lifetime spent entertaining millions. He performed his final sold-out Las Vegas shows at South Point Casino in January, closing a remarkable fifty-one-year run as a Las Vegas headliner. On March 22, he delivered his final live concert at Mohegan Sun Arena, marking his sixty-fifth appearance at the venue over twenty-three years. The event was hailed as a historic farewell befitting one of America’s most beloved entertainers.

Though retired from touring, Orlando remains a vibrant force in entertainment. He continues to host Saturday Nights with Tony Orlando on 77 WABC Music Radio, now in its third successful year and streaming to 170 countries. This year, his extraordinary legacy is being honored with the Icon Award at the Josie Music Awards in Nashville and the Lifetime Achievement Award at The Dream Awards in Las Vegas. These recognitions affirm what fans and peers have long known: Tony Orlando’s influence remains as powerful today as ever.

At 82, Tony Orlando continues to inspire with his optimism, humility, and deep faith. “My faith in the Lord was my saving grace... you have to keep the faith, so you are not alone,” he shared recently. His journey - from teenage hitmaker to national treasure - remains one of the most remarkable careers in American entertainment history. Tony Orlando is not simply an icon of music and television. He is a symbol of gratitude, patriotism, and the power of entertainment to bring people together. His voice, his kindness, and his yellow ribbon will forever be part of America’s story.

ARTIST SPOTLIGHT

LIAM TYSINGER

By Robin Tanner

Liam Tysinger is a rising Country and Christian country artist from Asheboro, North Carolina, whose music reflects a deep respect for traditional Country roots and the values of faith, family, and freedom.

Liam draws inspiration from legendary artists. “I love traditional Country music, like George Strait, Merle Haggard, Keith Whitley, Tracy Lawrence, Vince Gill, Randy Travis and modern traditionalists like Zach Top.”

At seventeen years old, Liam is making a name for himself with his traditional sound and a positive approach to his music. He brings a classic Country sound to a new generation of listeners.

Liam's musical journey began early. He started playing piano at just five years old, developing a love for music that quickly became a central part of his life. By the age of eleven, he began learning guitar and mandolin while also discovering his voice as a singer. Much of his early musical experience came through church and singing with family, where his passion for meaningful music first took shape. He has been performing ever since, touching lives along the way.

In 2021, Liam began performing publicly at showcases and local events, building a reputation for his natural stage presence and authentic storyteller style. This North Carolina native shares his excitement working in the recording studios on his debut album. “I recorded my first song at the historic Wishbone Studios in Muscle Shoals, Alabama, in December of 2025. Then in January of this year, I laid down scratch vocals at Starstruck Entertainment Studios in Nashville Tennessee.”

Liam's latest single, How Much Grace, is currently in the Cross Country Hot 100 chart. From his upcoming new album on Rhythm Road Records, two new singles will be released in the coming months: Turn Another Stone and Country Sunday. His music is available on all streaming platforms.

Liam shares how his song has ministered to people. “The first time I played How Much Grace publicly, a young lady went to the altar and made a commitment to follow Jesus.” This is what Liam Tysinger is all about - making an impact with his music. “I want to have a music career where I create clean, positive Country music alongside Christian songs that lead others to Christ and help them grow deeper in their faith.”

And what can audiences expect during a live concert? “Depending on the setting, I usually play some classic Country songs, alongside some Gospel, Worship and maybe a little Bluegrass. I love it when a crowd gets involved, sings along, and reacts to what I am presenting. I'm not trying to be anyone but the man God made me to be.”

As a dedicated guitarist and vocalist with a distinctive sound, he connects with audiences through songs that reflect real life, strong values, and heartfelt country storytelling, and faith-driven Country music with a message of hope.

“Do the right thing because it’s the right thing to do.”

— Eric John Horsey

ERIC JOHN HORSEY

— SINGER • SONGWRITER —
MINISTER • STORYTELLER

Singer-songwriter of the
#1 Platinum Hit

“DIRTY ROAD”

Eric John Horsey is a retired Fleet Marine Force Corpsman with over 20 years of service. He’s been in the fight, in the fire, and in the places most people only hear about. Through it all, God’s grace never let go.

Today, Eric uses his testimony, his music, and his stories to share the Gospel the best way he knows how—raw, real, and unashamed.

ERIC’S MISSION IS SIMPLE:

TO SHARE THE GOSPEL
THE BEST WAY HE KNOWS HOW, AND

“DO THE RIGHT THING

because it is the right thing to do.

GOD AND COUNTRY TIME

Two POWERHOUSE RECORD LABEL and PROMOTIONS team up to bring to the world GAC RECORDS NASHVILLE/BGJ PROMOTIONS.

CEOs Leon Everett and Beverly Jenkins both have been in the music industry for over 50 years each just not together. Leon started out with RCA RECORDS having 9 GOLD albums, 11 straight top 10 hits and #1's. Beverly gets her knowledge of the music industry being married and working side by side with Vern Gosdin. These two teamed back up after meeting each other 50 years ago. Leon was best friends with Vern's brother Rex Gosdin and some of Leon's biggest hits were written by Rex and Les Reed. The great harmony on these records was also done by Rex Gosdin. Together GAC RECORDS NASHVILLE/BGJ PROMOTIONS are a force to be reckoned with.

With 8 artists and 10 singles on the biggest independent charts in Cashbox Magazine and 5 in the Cashbox Indie Country Countdown Top 20. THIS HURRICANE TRAIN KEEPS ROLLING DOWN THE TRACK making their way back to Nashville. Congratulations Leon Everett on your Grand Ole Opry appearance and once again being at the Josie Awards on Sept 19th to be INDUCTED INTO THE INDEPENDENT COUNTY MUSIC HALL OF FAME.

By Marian Vale

Disco did not begin with glitter. It did not begin with mirror balls or falsettos or white suits under neon lights. It began quietly, almost secretly, in places where America rarely looked. In the early 1970s, New York City was a city of contradictions - glamorous on the surface, but fractured underneath. Crime was rising, the economy was sinking, and entire communities were fighting simply to exist. Yet in the basements of Manhattan, in the converted warehouses of Brooklyn, in the humid, neon-lit clubs of Miami and Philadelphia, something extraordinary was happening.

People who had been pushed to the margins - Black and Latino communities, gay communities, women who were tired of being told how loudly they could live - were building a world of their own. They didn't have political power. They didn't have cultural influence. But they had rhythm. They had soul. They had the desire to move. And in those rooms, under dim lights and makeshift sound systems, they found liberation in the simplest of human acts: dancing.

The earliest Disco nights didn't have a name. They didn't need one. They were gatherings where the DJ - not the band - was the architect of emotion. He wasn't just spinning records; he was sculpting a journey. He stitched together soul, funk, Latin percussion, and psychedelic grooves into long, hypnotic tapestries that made dancers forget the world outside. In those rooms, the dance floor became a sanctuary, a place where identity wasn't judged but celebrated. The music didn't ask who you were. It asked only if you wanted to move.

And people moved.

They moved because the world outside felt heavy. They moved because the dance floor felt safe. They moved because the music gave them permission to be themselves - loudly, joyfully, unapologetically. Disco was not born from commercial ambition. It was born from human need.

As the decade unfolded, technology began to reshape the sound. Producers discovered that the studio itself could be an instrument. Synthesizers hummed with futuristic promise. Drum machines offered precision that human hands couldn't match. Strings swelled like cinematic waves. The four-on-the-floor beat - steady, relentless, heartbeat-like - became the foundation of a new musical language. Disco wasn't just evolving; it was becoming inevitable.

And then, almost overnight, it exploded.

The year was 1977, and Saturday Night Fever hit American culture like a meteor. Suddenly, Disco wasn't an underground movement - it was everywhere. The Bee Gees' harmonies soared across radio stations, roller rinks, shopping malls, and suburban living rooms. Donna Summer's voice - sensual, powerful, otherworldly - became the soundtrack of a generation learning to let go. KC and the Sunshine Band brought joy that felt almost defiant. Chic brought elegance and sophistication. Gloria Gaynor gave the world an anthem of survival that still echoes today.

For a moment, Disco was the center of the universe. It was the sound of escape in a decade marked by political fatigue, economic uncertainty, and cultural upheaval. People didn't just listen to Disco - they lived it. They wore it. They breathed it. They built entire identities around its shimmer. It was a genre that didn't just entertain; it transformed the way people saw themselves.

But America has always had a complicated relationship with joy, especially when that joy comes from marginalized communities. And Disco's reign was short not because the music faltered, but because the culture around it reacted.

By 1979, the backlash had begun. Rock loyalists - overwhelmingly white, male, and angry - felt threatened by Disco's dominance and everything it represented. The infamous Disco Demolition Night in Chicago wasn't just a stunt; it was a cultural tantrum. Thousands gathered to destroy Disco records in a violent spectacle that revealed more about America's anxieties than about the music itself. The industry panicked. Radio stations dropped Disco almost overnight. Labels abandoned it. Critics dismissed it. And just like that, the genre that had defined an era was declared dead.

But here's the truth: Disco didn't die. It simply slipped out of the spotlight and into the bloodstream of modern music.

The very elements that defined Disco - the beat, the groove, the electronic experimentation, the DJ-driven structure - became the foundation of new genres. In Chicago, those elements evolved into house music. In Detroit, they became techno. In Europe, they shaped synth-pop and Hi-NRG. In the 1980s and '90s, they fueled Dance-Pop, club music, and the rise of the superstar DJ. In the 2000s, they resurfaced in French house, in Daft Punk's robotic elegance, in Kylie Minogue's shimmering revivalism. Today, they pulse through Dua Lipa, Jessie Ware, Bruno Mars, Beyoncé's Renaissance, and every festival stage where thousands move as one.

Disco didn't vanish. It became immortal.

Its pioneers never truly left either. Nile Rodgers still tours the world, his guitar as sharp and joyful as ever. Gloria Gaynor still sings I Will Survive with the authority of someone who lived every syllable. KC and the Sunshine Band still bring their sunshine to stages across the globe. Barry Gibb carries the Bee Gees legacy with grace. Donna Summer's influence - especially her groundbreaking work with Giorgio Moroder - continues to shape electronic music decades after her passing.

And the dance floor? It remains what Disco made it: a place where people can be free.

Disco's story is not the story of a fad. It is the story of a revolution - one that rose from the margins, conquered the mainstream, endured a backlash, and then quietly became the foundation of everything that moves us today. It is the story of joy, of liberation, of rhythm as resistance. It is the story of a genre that lived fast, died young, and then found eternal life in every beat that makes the world dance.

Disco was never just music. It was a heartbeat. And that heartbeat never stopped.

The Icons Who Gave Disco Its Voice

Donna Summer

Donna Summer didn't just sing Disco - she embodied it. Her voice could whisper, soar, seduce, and command, often in the same breath. When she stepped into the studio with Giorgio Moroder, she became the bridge between human emotion and electronic futurism. I Feel Love wasn't just a hit; it was a cultural detonation that rewrote the rules of dance music. Summer's catalog - Last Dance, Hot Stuff, Love to Love You Baby - defined the era's sensuality and sophistication. She was the Queen of Disco because she carried the genre's heartbeat in her voice.

Chic

Nile Rodgers and Bernard Edwards didn't chase trends, they built foundations. Chic's music was Disco at its most refined: razor-sharp guitar lines, velvet-smooth bass, and arrangements that felt like champagne poured over rhythm. Le Freak and Good Times weren't just hits; they were blueprints. Rodgers' guitar became one of the most influential sounds in modern music, shaping everyone from Madonna to Daft Punk. Chic brought class to the dance floor - a reminder that Disco could be both glamorous and deeply musical.

Bee Gees

Barry, Robin, and Maurice Gibb didn't set out to define an era, but Saturday Night Fever made them its ambassadors. Their falsetto harmonies became the soundtrack of late-'70s America, echoing through roller rinks, nightclubs, and suburban living rooms. Stayin' Alive, Night Fever, and More Than a Woman captured the urgency, swagger, and vulnerability of a generation learning to dance through its troubles. The Bee Gees didn't just ride the Disco wave - they became its global voice.

Gloria Gaynor

When Gloria Gaynor recorded I Will Survive, she wasn't aiming for immortality, she was telling the truth. The song became more than a Disco classic; it became a declaration of resilience for anyone who had ever been knocked down. Gaynor's voice carried strength without losing tenderness, making her one of the era's most emotionally resonant performers. Her music reminded the world that Disco wasn't just about joy, it was about endurance.

Sylvester

Sylvester was Disco's glittering rebel: flamboyant, fearless, and vocally unmatched. His Gospel-powered falsetto on You Make Me Feel (Mighty Real) became a lightning bolt of queer pride and dance-floor liberation. He didn't just perform; he radiated. Sylvester's presence proved that Disco was a home for the bold, the beautiful, and the unapologetically themselves.

The Trammps

With Disco Inferno, The Trammps delivered one of the genre's most explosive anthems. Their blend of Soul, Funk, and Disco created a sound that felt both classic and cutting-edge. They brought heat to the dance floor - literal and metaphorical - and helped define the era's high-energy pulse.

KC and the Sunshine Band

Few acts captured Disco's exuberance like KC and the Sunshine Band. Their brass-driven, feel-good hits Get Down Tonight, That's the Way (I Like It), and Shake Your Booty were pure celebration. They didn't chase complexity; they chased happiness. Their sound was Miami heat, dance-floor sweat, and unfiltered joy. In an era of cultural tension, they gave America permission to smile.

In the end, Disco's story is not just the tale of a genre that rose, fell, and rose again. It is the story of people who found themselves in the glow of a dance floor, who discovered freedom in rhythm, who learned that joy can be a form of courage. Its pulse still echoes in every club, every festival, every song built on the promise that movement can heal what the world breaks. And as long as there are lights to dim, speakers to warm, and hearts willing to be lifted, Disco will keep teaching us how to dance.

Staff, Cashbox

There are bands that make hits, and then there are bands that make myths. Fleetwood Mac has always belonged to the second category - a group whose music didn't just climb charts, but carved itself into the emotional architecture of generations. Their story is a tapestry of reinvention, brilliance, conflict, and the strange miracle of people who could no longer hold each other together, yet somehow created art that held the world.

Fleetwood Mac began far from the California sun that would later define their sound. In 1967, Peter Green, Mick Fleetwood, John McVie, and Jeremy Spencer formed a British Blues outfit that quickly earned respect for its atmospheric guitar work and soulful restraint. Their early success - including the haunting No. 1 single Albatross - proved they were more than another London club band. They were craftsmen, building something quiet, steady, and deeply musical.

But destiny had other plans.

By 1974, the band had crossed the Atlantic and found themselves in Los Angeles, searching for a new identity. They found it in two young artists whose chemistry was as combustible as it was creative: Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks.

Buckingham brought precision, experimentation, and a restless artistic fire. Nicks brought mystique, poetry, and a voice that sounded like wind moving through a canyon. Christine McVie - already the band's warm, steady center - became the glue that held the new constellation together.

Their first album with this lineup, "Fleetwood Mac" (1975), didn't just succeed, it soared to No. 1. The band had transformed from blues craftsmen into architects of shimmering California rock.

Then came "Rumours." Released in 1977, the album became one of the best-selling records in history: more than 120 million copies worldwide, and won the Grammy Award for 'Album of the Year.' But its brilliance came from a place no band would ever choose: heartbreak.

Buckingham and Nicks were breaking up. Christine and John McVie were divorcing. Mick Fleetwood was facing his own personal storms. The band was unraveling privately while recording publicly - trapped in the same studio, singing songs about each other, to each other, in real time.

And yet the music soared.

Dreams... Go Your Own Way... The Chain... Don't Stop. These weren't just tracks, they were emotional documents, written in the middle of the fire. Fleetwood Mac didn't hide their fractures; they turned them into anthems. "Rumours" became the rare album that felt like a diary the whole world was allowed to read.

After "Rumours," the band refused to repeat themselves. "Tusk" (1979) was sprawling, experimental, and defiantly uncommercial - a creative risk that proved Buckingham's artistic fearlessness. "Mirage" (1982) and "Tango in the Night" (1987) brought the band back to radio dominance, producing hits that defined the '80s as surely as "Rumours" defined the '70s.

Lineup changes came. Solo careers blossomed. Breaks were taken. Returns were made. Through it all, Fleetwood Mac remained a band whose music felt like memory - intimate, confessional, and timeless.

Now, nearly six decades after their formation, Fleetwood Mac stands at the edge of their final chapter.

2026 marks the band's farewell era - a year of closing circles, honoring legacies, and giving fans one last chance to stand in the glow of a sound that shaped their lives. Christine McVie, who passed in 2022, is honored through archival performances, tributes, and arrangements that keep her warmth alive onstage.

Stevie Nicks and Lindsey Buckingham - two artists whose story has always felt like a novel - return to the stage with Mick Fleetwood and John McVie for a final run that feels less like a tour and more like a pilgrimage. Fans aren't just attending concerts; they're witnessing history.

This farewell isn't about nostalgia. It's about gratitude for the music, the memories, and the miracle of a band that turned personal storms into universal songs.

Fleetwood Mac's legacy isn't measured in sales, awards, or chart positions, though they have all of those in abundance. Their legacy lives in the way their music feels. In the way Landslide still makes people cry. In the way The Chain still makes stadiums roar. In the way Dreams found new life decades later and reminded the world that some songs never stop speaking.

They taught generations that vulnerability is a kind of power. That heartbreak can become harmony. That music can be both a wound and a healing.

And as their final chapter unfolds, Fleetwood Mac stands not just as one of Rock's greatest bands, but as one of its most human - proof that sometimes the most unforgettable art comes from the places where life is hardest, and love is complicated, and people are trying their best to stay whole.

Fleetwood Mac didn't just make music. They made history. And now, they take their bow.

The Redemptive Road, the Rising Voice, and the Country Gospel Heart of Ken Mobley

By Jackson McKee

The first thing you notice about Ken Mobley isn't the cowboy hat, the boots, or even the unmistakable warmth in his South Georgia drawl. It's the sincerity. The kind of sincerity that can't be manufactured, rehearsed, or polished for the stage. It's lived-in. Weathered. Proven. And it's the thread that runs through every chapter of his life - from the dirt roads of his childhood to the hospice halls where he has spent more than fifteen years serving families in their most fragile moments, to the more than 1,400 programs he has performed across the country sharing what he proudly calls Dirt Road Gospel.

Mobley's story is not simply one of musical ascent; it is one of calling, redemption, and service. It is the story of a man who has spent his life walking into places most people avoid - hospice rooms, veterans' shelters, pandemic-stricken nursing home - and bringing with him the one thing he believes every person needs: hope.

"God loved me when I was unlovable. He showed me kindness when my heart was bitter. He gave me hope when I had none," Ken says. "Every opportunity I have today is because of the transforming power of Jesus Christ."

This is the heart of the Singing Cowboy. And this is why his story stands as one of the most compelling, relevant, and deeply needed features of the year.

THE ROOTS OF A REDEEMED STORY

Raised in South Georgia, Ken grew up surrounded by the sounds of traditional Gospel, country living, and the kind of storytelling that shaped generations before him. Those early influences became the foundation of his signature style - Dirt Road Gospel - music that blends honest narratives with unwavering faith.

But the road to becoming an award-winning Country Gospel artist wasn't paved with industry connections or overnight success. It was carved through hardship, healing, and a long season of learning to trust God's voice above every other.

"Your story is My story, son," Ken recalls the Lord saying to him during a quiet moment of prayer. "Tell people where you've been, what you've gone through, where I met you in your darkest moments, and how I brought you through them."

That moment changed everything. It redirected his ministry, reshaped his songwriting, and ignited a fire that continues to burn through every lyric he writes.

THE PANDEMIC THAT BIRTHED A MINISTRY

In 2020, when the world shut down and isolation became a daily reality for millions, Ken received a call from a friend working at an assisted living community. Residents were lonely. Families were separated. Caregivers were exhausted. The emotional toll was devastating.

Ken's response was simple - but it became historic. "Can you open the windows?" he asked. When she said yes, he replied, "If you can open the windows, I'll come sing outside."

That single act of compassion sparked a ministry that spread across the Southeast. Ken traveled from facility to facility, singing through windows, across courtyards, and under awnings - anywhere he could safely bring hope to people who desperately needed it.

Those outdoor concerts became lifelines. Caregivers cried. Residents waved from behind glass. Families stood outside in masks listening to hymns that reminded them they were not forgotten.

As restrictions lifted, those window concerts turned into invitations to come inside. Relationships formed. Hearts healed. And Ken discovered a deeper calling than he had ever known.

"Every concert is more than a performance," he says. "It's an opportunity to encourage hearts, share God's love, and remind people that even in life's hardest seasons, there is always hope, mercy, and grace waiting at the end of the road."

A LIFE OF SERVICE BEYOND THE STAGE

Ken's ministry doesn't end when the music stops. For more than fifteen years, he has served in hospice care, walking with families through the most sacred and difficult moments of life. Today, as Director of Veteran Resources for Three Oaks Hospice, he ensures veterans receive the honor, benefits, and compassionate care they earned through service.

A veteran himself, Ken has become a respected advocate across the Southeast, building partnerships, educating healthcare professionals, and connecting thousands of veterans with VA benefits and community resources.

His commitment extends even further through Operation PATH, a nonprofit initiative providing compassionate hospice care to homeless individuals, including homeless veterans nearing the end of life.

This is where Ken's heart beats strongest. "My mission has never been to build a career, it has always been to build God's Kingdom," he says. "If people remember my name, I'm grateful. But if they leave remembering the name of Jesus, then I've accomplished exactly what God called me to do."

THE RISE OF A COUNTRY GOSPEL VOICE

In recent years, Ken's music has gained national attention. His original songs, including Where Are You Now, Old Church Songs, Jesus Is the King, and I Know Jesus have earned multiple Top 10 appearances on Christian Country radio charts.

In 2026, he received two major honors: Gospel Music Fan Awards 'Horizon Male,' and Kingdom Impact Award. These awards recognize not only his musical excellence but his unwavering commitment to using music as ministry.

He has been featured on Alabama Gospel Roots on PBS, appeared on RFD-TV's Cowboy Church, and partnered with SGH Promotions and Never 2 Late Ministries. His newest album, "Dirt Road Revival," includes his latest radio release, No Funeral, a song that captures his signature blend of storytelling, faith, and Country Gospel authenticity.

THE PEOPLE GOD SENT ALONG THE WAY

Ken is quick to say he doesn't walk this road alone. He often expresses gratitude for the people God placed in his life to guide, encourage, and strengthen him. "God never gave up on me, even when I had given up on myself," he says. "And He used faithful people to open doors exactly when I needed them."

He credits Randall Wilds, Ava and Jerry Kasich, Victoria Steelman, Rachel Taylor, the members of Going Higher, Stephanie Hager of SGH Promotions, and Dennis Williams of Alabama Gospel Roots as instrumental voices in his journey.

THE POWER OF DIRT ROAD GOSPEL

Ken's concerts are not just musical events, they are gatherings of community, memory, and faith. He has watched people from every background find common ground in a lyric, a story, or a testimony.

"I've watched bankers, farmers, veterans, young families - people from every imaginable background - find connection in a song," he says. "Those moments remind me that the songs were never really about me. They're about a God who meets people exactly where they are."

His goal is simple: To create an atmosphere where people laugh together, reflect together, worship together, and leave knowing they are loved by a Savior whose grace is greater than any burden they carry.

THE CALLING THAT STILL DRIVES HIM

Ken's testimony is not polished perfection, it is raw redemption. It is the story of a man who asked God how he could serve "in bigger and better ways," and received an answer that changed his life: "Tell My story."

Today, every song he writes is a sermon. Every concert is a mission field. Every handshake, every prayer, every lyric is an offering of gratitude to the God who restored his life.

"The greatest rewards of my ministry aren't measured by the things of this world," Ken says. "They're measured by the lives God allows me to touch along the way."

THE SINGING COWBOY'S LEGACY

Ken Mobley stands as a reminder of what this genre is truly about: faith, service, redemption, and the power of testimony. He is a rising voice in Country Gospel music, yes. But more importantly, he is a servant. A storyteller. A veteran advocate. A man who believes every song is an opportunity to point someone to Christ.

And in a world desperate for authenticity, his Dirt Road Gospel continues to shine like a lantern on a dark night: steady, warm, and unmistakably rooted in the love, mercy, and grace of Jesus Christ.
